"A carnivore's dream...

Boston's Best New Steakhouse."

—The Improper Bostonian Magazine

"Plaza III is Gourmet Greatness."

—The Phantom Gourmet

"The focus is on the quality of the steak, flown in daily...from their own meat company. Memories are made of beef like this, the savory notes hitting high in the palate, filling the mouth with texture and aroma."

—Alison Arnett, The Boston Globe

"A touch of class has come to Faneuil Hall Marketplace with the arrival of Plaza III...first class restaurants are hard to find here, especially a topnotch steak house."

—Gus Saunders, The Boston Herald 1/2

GEORGE WASHINGTON was well-known for his crossing of the Delaware. And upon one occasion, our threshold.

IT HAPPENED DURING THE AUTUMN OF 1789, while President Washington was visiting Boston. He called upon an old friend, Major Benjamin Frothingham, who lived in Charlestown. Later, the two stopped by Warren Tavern for drinks, making Washington one of our most famous patrons. Why not stop by yourself? And if you happen to know the President, by all means bring him along.

WARNING:

TOBACCO ADS DON'T WARN YOU ABOUT THE DANGERS OF SECONDHAND SMOKE. WE DO.

RESTAURANT & BAR WORKERS HAVE THE HIGHEST RATE OF LUNG CANCER AMONG ALL OCCUPATIONS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The Tobacco Industry and some restaurant trade associations oppose local laws to protect the health of restaurant workers from environmental tobacco smoke.

If you are a current or former bartender, waiter or waitress and a non-smoker, you may be eligible for financial compensation for your health damage and medical bills. We are planning legal actions against the tobacco industry, restaurants and their trade associations. If you'd like to participate or get more information, call 1-800-ETS-SUIT.

Pussy Galore

It's a simple fact of life—librarians love pussy...cats that is. In filmmaker Gary Roma's latest documentary, Puss in Books: Adventures of the Library Cat, Roma travels cross-country to seek out and get to know these cuddly felines. At one point in the research Roma even flies to Nevada to meet Baker and Taylor—the Bruce and Demi of library cat society. The half-hour movie takes a look at 12-15 cats is be preceded by Roma's first documentary, Off the Ground & Off the Wall: A Doorstep Documentary, which features Gene Shalit. Puss will be screened at The Museum of Fine Arts on Saturday, March 28 at 1:30 pm. Tickets are $7. 465 Huntington Avenue.

Late at night in Boston, and the town's closing down tighter than a red snapper's lips. It's too early to go home, but too late to drive to Iowa. My inner self cries out for a Conch fritter and a Bahama Mama. Need to have a long talk with the inner self.

Monica's less adventurous. Just wants coconut shrimp and a brew. We go to the Legal C Bar and Grille. The place is jumping. The food is great. It's a beautiful thing.

Jonesing

Formed in Jamaica Plain by four guys with names like Big Ron Jones, Conrad Jones, Joel Jones Jr. and Rev. Moe Jones the band, aptly named the Jones Brothers, will appear at the Midway Cafe in Jamaica Plain on the evening of March 27. Dedicated to playing material "further left-of-field than Boston audiences are used to hearing," the brothers' raw style is reminiscent of the early days at the Fillmore West. Check out this hard-rockin' outfit and, if need be, come with a crash helmet. The Midway Cafe, 3496 Washington Street, Jamaica Plain.

Crash

Val Akula's terrible car crash in March 1987 was a kickoff to inspiration. Now showing at Gallery 57 are the fruits of her labor to recovery. The Accident Series: Recovery Through Expression are Akula's bold wood block and linoleum prints documenting the artist's gradual healing process from the harrowing experience. Her images range from a figure bound in ropes to a whimsical pig-tailed girl looking through binoculars to see the future. Akula's work can be viewed from April 2 to the 28th at the Cambridge Arts Council's Gallery 57, 57 Inman Street, 2nd Floor, Cambridge. Call 349-4380 for more information.

God Save The Queen

Part Alice In Wonderland, part postmodern morality act, Alice under Glass or The Wrath of the Inner Queen is a freakish improv weaving audience suggestions into scenes, music and characters such as Mad Hatter, Duchess, Caterpillar and the Queen of Hearts (played by David Hanbury). Presented by TheatreZone on Sunday, March 29, 7 pm at the Actors Workshop, this performance will help benefit TheatreZone's trek to the Montreal Fringe Festival. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased by calling 887-2336. The Actors Workshop, 40 Boylston Street.

★★★★ Terrific

Fireworks
★★★½
There's been a buzz on the film festival circuit and in the cult press about Japan's multi-media star Takeshi Kitano. The actor-director's seventh film is his first to be released in the U.S. His self-styled hardboiled persona here serves an unexpectedly moving story of risk and self-discovery. Two cops's lives diverge after one is shot and paralyzed in the line of duty. Wheelchair-bound Horibe (Ren Osuge), abandoned by his family, pulls himself out of despair by creating fantastical paintings (painted by Kitano). The guilt-ridden Nishi (Kitano), whose wife has a terminal disease, leaves the force and embarks on a lunatic caper. With dark humor and a meticulous attention to visuals and to jolting editing touches, Kitano builds a bridge between the sophisticated samurai movies of the 1960s and the modern shoot-'em-up. Kitano's film is far more oblique and austere than those of John Woo (it's more like Jean-Pierre Melville's), but both men put heart into an often glib genre.

Mr. Nice Guy
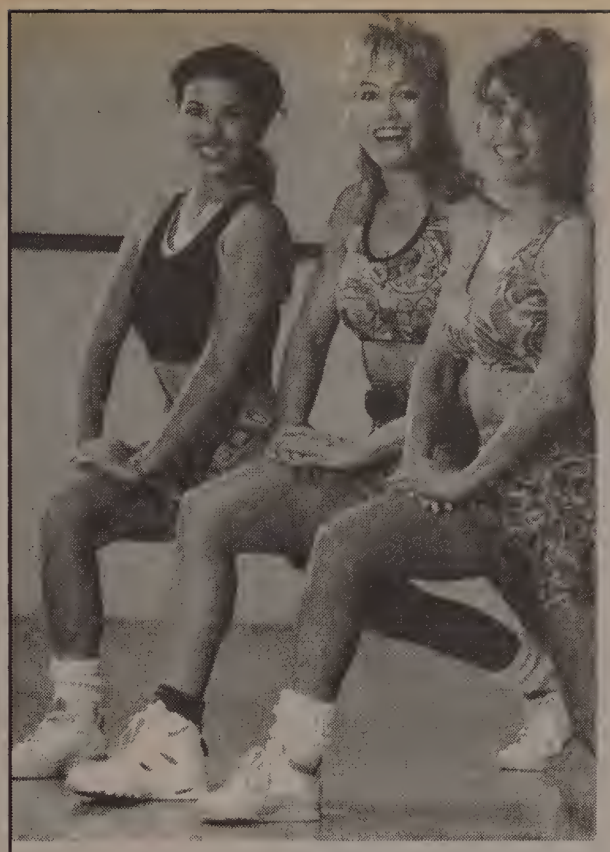
More than any of Jackie Chan's recent productions, this one lets the Hong Kong action-comedy star work his unique magic. Not that there's anything outstandingly clever in the movie; the plot is outlandish and the humor often corny. There's just a glow about it, as we're ushered from action setpiece to action setpiece by director Samo Hung (a longtime Chan colleague and action-comedy star himself). Chan plays a TV cooking show host mixed up in the perils of an investigative reporter (Gabrielle Fitzpatrick) on the run from a drug kingpin (Richard Norton lampooning Steven Seagal) and a street gang. Chases and fights feature gung-ho work by the kamikaze stunt crew (but no bloody violence). The masterpiece is a fight atop a horsedrawn carriage as it gallops through traffic. The movie is a nifty homage to rollicking silent comedy and adventure, and Chan's gravity-defying grace proves he's the modern equivalent of Gene Kelly.



The Big Lebowski
The Coen Brothers's latest is analogous to Mars Attacks!: you know its maker(s) can make deeper and better movies, but damn, this one is funny. The movie is a stream of consciousness centering on a relic of '60s counterculture called The Dude. Our hero is played brilliantly, down to the drug-numbed nerve fiber, by Jeff Bridges. Surnamed Lebowski, The Dude gets mistaken for a millionaire named Lebowski (David Huddleston), and the twisted plot begins. Yeah, it leaves a sour taste that the Coens use kidnapping and ransom so soon after Fargo. And that the retro bowling subculture in which The Dude spends his considerable leisure time has been done inKingpin. But there's so much dazzling shtik in The Big Lebowski that it seems pointless to quibble about continuity and originality. John Goodman gets his best movie role in the past umpteen as The Dude's buddy Walter, rational-sounding but psycho. John Turturro is out-there as the peacock-like Latino bowling god Jesus. Julianne Moore amazes an action painter who speaks in patrician lockjaw. Lots more great supporting players, and trippy dream sequences.

Men With Guns
John Sayles follows up Lone Star with a Spanish-language film that mourns the cycle of politically motivated violence in Latin America—and shows us the people who are caught in the crossfire between military regimes and rebel factions. Frederico Luppi (Cronos) plays a doctor with a cushy practice who has trained idealistic young medicos for a relief agency. A chance encounter makes him realize that his former students, now practicing in Indian villages in the mountains, are in danger. His search for the young doctors becomes our learning experience, as he hears stories from a precocious orphan boy who becomes his guide, a soldier who has deserted, and a guilt-stricken priest. Fresh as the subject is for American cinema, Sayles's movie is sadly stiff. It's as if, in telling a daring story, he felt he had to dumb-down the story-telling devices he uses. As the cliches mount, the film becomes black-and-white in outlook (saved somewhat by the deserter character), and thus easy to dismiss.

Mrs. Dalloway
Marleen Gorris's (Antonia's Line) film version of Virginia Woolf's novel is a movie of gentle power. On a lovely spring day in London in 1923, Mrs. Clarissa Dalloway (Vanessa Redgrave), wife of a Member of Parliament, thinks about the summer of 1890, when she made a decision that would determine her path in life. Natascha McElhone plays the radiant young Clarissa, who is courted by friends of both sexes on her family's lush country estate. The 1920s story contains a subplot that adds a tragic dimension to the piece, about a World War I veteran (Rupert Graves) suffering from delayed shell-shock. Redgrave conveys the doubts that lie within the society lady's dignified exterior. Gorris finds visceral ways to complement Woolf's words; the screenplay was written by actress Eileen Atkins, who has made it her mission to bring Woolf to the public on stage and screen.

Multi-media Japanese sensation Takeshi Kitano acts and directs in Fireworks.

How'd They Do That?

For the last two years the Green Street Grill in Cambridge has been a host to magicians, sleight of handsters, Blackstone-wanabees and fans who come to be dazzled. Every Tuesday patrons can sit at the bar or an intimate table and watch their $20s get sliced in half and put back together. They can watch card tricks. They are wowed by a magical orgy of sorts with anywhere from four to eight magicians running around and interacting with the crowd at a given time. Begun a couple years back by magician Joe McClure, the "Magicians & Spirits" night has since grown tremendously in popularity. Check out the acts every Tuesday at 9 pm at the Green Street Grill, 280 Green Street, Cambridge, 876-1655.

are $50 in advance by calling sponsor, the Neighborhood Association of the Back Bay, at 859-RSVP.

A Sinking Ship

Dubbed as "Titanic Dinners" the six course feast at the Hampshire House promises a "perfect mix of elegant black tie and Edwardian period dress." All guests who enter the fog-filled foyer are asked to sign the ships registry. The events, which take place on April 1 and April 15, offer patrons a chance to really experience what a last meal feels like in true sinking-ship fashion. The Hampshire House, 84 Beacon Street.

Mardi Gras

Magnolia's in Cambridge celebrates the delicacies of the bayou through March 28 with its Mardi Gras Festival. Showcasing fresh seafood and shellfish flown in from the Gulf Coast, the Mardi Gras Festival's selections include crawfish, shrimp remoulade and pan-fried catfish. Call 576-19712 for reservations.

Sushi & Champagne

Every Friday night through March, chef Jam Navaraj rolls his own sushi and pairs it with various French champagnes at The Exchange Restaurant and Cafe on State Street. For a mere $25, guests will be joined by the chef as he acquaints them with the various subtleties of the champagne and how they are matched with the sushi. Call 726-7600 for more information.

Snacks

Tanjore in Cambridge is the first restaurant in Boston to serve "nashtas," which means snacks. Served between meals or late-nite in India, the personal-sized portions can also be made into a meal just as you would at a Chinese dim sum. Some of the nashtas treats include Ragda Pettis (potato patties on a bed of white peas topped with tamarind), Dahi Bhalla (lentil dumplings with yogurt) and Reshmi Kabobs (a "pate" of chicken and herbs wrapped around a skewer and charcoal-grilled). Prices range from $4-8.

Tea and Tunes

Afternoon tea at the Bristol Lounge of the Four Seasons Hotel will get a little livelier this winter with the addition of the Harvard Krokodiles. Slug back tea (blow first) to the tunes of Harvard University's oldest a cappella singing group the first Saturday of every month from January through May and September through December from 3:30-4 pm.

Theater Food

To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

Euro

Forget Seth Greenberg's haunts for the hottest Euro scene—hit Turner Fisheries at the Westin Copley Place Boston instead with its EuroCuisine '98. Chef David Filippetti takes you on a culinary excursion spiced with European Michelin guest chef visits, cookbook signings and wine tastings. Menu specials will be paired with wines from Laboure-Roi and Chateau Lynch. Don't miss the Pan Seared Scallops Pancetta, and don't forget to stick your pinkie out ever so delicately while sipping your wine.

Why bother asking for my number if you're not going to call? Now I understand why you got canned. It seems you have a habit of not following through. Truly...your loss! I hope hanging out with the boys all weekend is enough.
ME

"My Favorite Vinny," the funny guy
Fool me once—shame on you. Fool me twice—shame on me. Fool me thrice—LAWSUIT TIME! I trusted you and thought you were a "stand up guy" and not just a "stand up comic." When you needed to borrow money from me I said, "No problem." But there seemed to be a "problem" with you returning both my phone calls and my money. Your check bounced higher than a superball. Did you REALLY think I would just walk away from that kind of money? So I will see you in court where you will be a "stand up defendant." I'll see you sooner than you think and I won't be nearly as understanding this third time around. "Badda Boom, Badda Bing," as you are so fond of saying in your well groomed shtick. I can't believe that YOU OF ALL PEOPLE punked out on me like this. You are not a man. You are a human maxi-pad.

To Our Moroccan Friends, Samad and Marty
The Sunday in Ji Panino was the most wonderful night in our lives. We enjoyed your company throughout the whole night. The most exciting part of the evening was the after-party which gave us a lot of satisfaction. But there were some little details we would like to mention to you boys;

Samad—everything was just like in the dream, except the fact that your little "boy" was not big enough. But don't worry because maybe one day it will actually grow bigger.

Marty—you are a very active boy with a lot of young spirit and we understand that, but you better hold your horses before you "explode."

We hope that this will help you in your future adventures.

One and Only
7 months ago I let you in my life. You said I was your one and only, but for 4 months you lied to my face, heart and soul. Hope you have a nice birthday. March eyes lie.
OOPS

Seth
Watching you study and working out problems makes me very proud. You have been my role model and I look up to you, even though you may think I don't care, or listen, I do. We will climb every mountain and swim every lake just as long as I have you holding my hand. I love you very, very, very much.
PRINCESS

Lynette
You are my lovely blond-haired, blue-eyed queen. You mean everything to me. I can't stop thinking about you. I am so glad that you said "yes". 5-17-2000. That will be the happiest day of my life. Don't go anywhere.

Aldara™ (IMIQUIMOD) Cream, 5%

Brief Summary—Consult package insert for full prescribing information.

DESCRIPTION
Aldara™ is the brand name for imiquimod which is an immune response modifier. Each gram of the 5% cream contains 50 mg of imiquimod in an off-white oil-in-water vanishing cream base.

INDICATIONS AND USAGE
Aldara 5% cream is indicated for the treatment of external genital and perianal warts/condyloma acuminata in adults.

CONTRAINDICATIONS
None known

WARNINGS
Aldara cream has not been evaluated for the treatment of urethral, intra-vaginal, cervical, rectal, or intra-anal human papilloma viral disease and is not recommended for these conditions.

PRECAUTIONS

General
Local skin reactions such as erythema, erosion, excoriation/flaking, and edema are common. Should severe local skin reaction occur, the cream should be removed by washing the treatment area with mild soap and water. Treatment with Aldara cream can be resumed after the skin reaction has subsided. There is no clinical experience with Aldara cream therapy immediately following the treatment of genital/perianal warts with other cutaneously applied drugs; therefore, Aldara cream administration is not recommended until genital/perianal tissue is healed from any previous drug or surgical treatment. Aldara has the potential to exacerbate inflammatory conditions of the skin.

Information for Patients
Patients using Aldara 5% cream should receive the following information and instructions: The effect of Aldara 5% cream on the transmission of genital/perianal warts is unknown. Aldara 5% cream may weaken condoms and vaginal diaphragms. Therefore, concurrent use is not recommended.

1. This medication is to be used as directed by a physician. It is for external use only. Eye contact should be avoided.
2. The treatment area should not be bandaged or otherwise covered or wrapped as to be occlusive.
3. Sexual (genital, anal, oral) contact should be avoided while the cream is on the skin.
4. It is recommended that 6-10 bours following Aldara 5% cream application the treatment area be washed with mild soap and water.
5. It is common for patients to experience local skin reactions such as erythema, erosion, excoriation/flaking, and edema at the site of application or surrounding areas. Most skin reactions are mild to moderate. Severe skin reactions can occur and should be reported promptly to the prescribing physician.
6. Uncircumcised males treating warts under the foreskin should retract the foreskin and clean the area daily.
7. Patients should be aware that new warts may develop during therapy, as Aldara is not a cure.

Carcinogenicity, Mutagenesis, and Impairment of Fertility
Rodent carcinogenicity data are not available. Imiquimod was without effect in a series of eight different mutagenicity assays including Ames, mouse lymphoma, CHO chromosome aberration, buman lympbocyte chromosome aberration, SHE cell transformation, rat and hamster bone marrow cytogenetics, and mouse dominant lethal test. Daily oral administration of imiquimod to rats, at doses up to 8 times the recommended human dose on a mg/m^2 basis throughout mating, gestation, parturition and lactation, demonstrated no impairment of reproduction.

Pregnancy
Pregnancy Category B: There are no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Imiquimod was not found to be teratogenic in rat or rabbit teratology studies. In rats at a high maternally toxic dose (28 times human dose on a mg/m^2 basis), reduced pup weights and delayed ossification were observed. In developmental studies with offspring of pregnant rats treated with imiquimod (8 times human dose), no adverse effects were demonstrated.

Nursing Mothers
It is not known whether topically applied imiquimod is excreted in breast milk.

Pediatric Use
Safety and efficacy in patients below the age of 18 years bave not been established.

ADVERSE REACTIONS
In controlled clinical trials, the most frequently reported adverse reactions were those of local skin and application site reactions; some patients also reported systemic reactions. These reactions were usually mild to moderate in intensity; however, severe reactions were reported with 3X/week application. These reactions were more frequent and more intense with daily application than with 3X/week application. Overall, in the 3X/week application clinical studies, 1.2% (4/327) of the patients discontinued due to local skin/application site reactions. The incidence and severity of local skin reactions during controlled clinical trials are shown in the following table.

Remote site skin reactions were also reported in female and male patients treated 3X/week with imiquimod 5% cream. The severe remote site skin reactions reported for females were erythema (3%), ulceration (2%), and edema (1%); and for males, erosion (2%), and erythema, edema, induration, and excoriation/flaking (each 1%).

Adverse events judged to be probably or possibly related to Aldara reported by more than 5% of patients are listed below; also included are soreness, influenza-like symptoms and myalgia.

Incidences reported without regard to causality with Aldara.*

Adverse events judged to be possibly or probably related to Aldara and reported by more than 1% of patients include: Application Site Disorders: Wart Site Reactions (burning, hypopigmentation, irritation, itching, pain, rash, sensitivity, soreness, stinging, tenderness); Remote Site Reactions (bleeding, burning, itching, pain, tenderness, tinea cruris); Body as a Whole: fatigue, fever, influenza-like symptoms; Central and Peripheral Nervous System Disorders: headache; Gastro-Intestinal System Disorders: diarrhea; Musculo-Skeletal System Disorders: myalgia.

OVERDOSAGE
Overdosage of Aldara 5% cream is unlikely due to minimal percutaneous absorption. However, persistent topical overdosing of Aldara 5% cream could result in severe local skin reactions. Hypotension was reported following multiple oral doses of >200 mg of imiquimod and was resolved following oral or intravenous fluid administration.

DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION
Aldara cream is to be applied 3 times per week, prior to normal sleeping hours, and left on the skin for 6-10 hours.

HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

MARCH 25 - APRIL 7, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

The party's over. Chatty Mercury turning retrograde in Aries can be an annoying gadfly that won't go away, but it won't bite. The desire to cut, burn, rage and ravage comes from ruling Mars in your sign urging you to get to the core, bloody though it may be, of a personal matter. Gum surgery, anyone? A frustrating matter that might literally kill can arise in the guise of an April Fool's prank. Be very careful which asshole you pick to be the butt of your joke. It could backfire.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Artists and social butterflies (they are not mutually exclusive) are helped by someone of stature working behind the scenes. The responsible party, a supportive sextile between respectable Saturn and your Venus ruler this Saturday, sets the tone for a fundraiser that is fun and also raises your reputation. What you should avoid is a chest-baring, breast-beasting session with a father confessor-type midweek that may do more damage than either of you antic-ipated. Come Palm Sunday, more martyrdom.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Some Geminis are so attuned to Mercury movements, you can use its retrograde period to your advantage; to clean out drawers and closets, rewrite scripts, visit old friends. You know that no new business will come in and that forward progress won't take place until after Mercury goes direct on April 20. You guys probably made plans for the Easter-Passover holiday months ago. But some Twins prefer to wing it, never knowing what will come up or whose voice from their nefarious past will call up. For them, this retrograde can be quite an adventure. Psychic directions on the 6th.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

This week crabby Crabs find something to whine about, someone to get angry with time and time again. You may hear another variation of no-good news as soon as Mercury flips. If you do something about it Tuesday, you're liable to regret it Wednesday. All this agitation stems from aggravating planets in your Aries midheaven, squaring your natal Cancer stuff placements. The best thing to do is use the energy of the Aries new moon on the 27th to your advantage: Know where you stand and what you're doing, and prepare to receive static from your employer.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Unless you're flying overseas or publicizing your book, Mercury's retrogression shouldn't disrupt the rhythm of your days. You could use the three-week period to do research (for a future trip overseas?) or to thoroughly explore a new interest on the Internet. While there's a healing trine between your sun ruler and Pluto this weekend, reach out to a family member who is ailing, straighten out a financial matter that concerns you both. Don't treat an off-beat approach to a potential partnership as an April Fools' joke; when the sun and enlightening Uranus align, anything is possible.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Patience is the key to heaven. Keep chanting this mantra through Mercury's retrogression and you'll come out the other side (around April 20) relatively unscathed. Partnership matters can be problematic, especially where taxes and investments are concerned. You might sense the potential danger when your Mercury ruler meets Saturn (Saturday) and Mars (next Tuesday), but all is not darkness and dread. Mercury also makes nice to loving Venus this weekend; you could run into a former co-worker and renew the relationship.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Behold the enemy. Seriously, what may happen when Mars and Saturn (the ancient malefics) meet in your Aries house of allies and adversaries can create as challenging a situation as you'll encounter in the next seven years. (There's your spoonful of sugar to help the medicine go down.) Try to avoid any hint of violence, although guys (it's a mucho macho aspect) in uniform are available if needed. As usual, your innate charm and willingness to go another route or explore an alternative means of expression can lessen the difficulties coming at you.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

First the good news. Because the sun's trine to your Pluto co-ruler on Saturday rewards your evolving image of yourself, it's likely that someone who is hot for you is no longer afraid of showing it. The bad news is that your Mars co-ruler runs smack into a wall when it conjuncts stern Saturn on April 1. Either a situation at work is shot down, or you have a bad scene with an employee or the toothache from hell invades your mouth. Be careful when working out; even lifting weights can be harmful to your well-being.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Archers who have struggled all year with powerful Plutonic transformations—No longer bad to the bone?—may be rewarded this weekend when the Aries sun trines Pluto at 7+ Sag. This beneficial vibe could also help heal the nation's image because that is the USA Ascendant degree. We'll see. The rest of us could have trouble with a child or lover, maybe a bookie or ticketbroker, when reckless Mars and conservative Saturn meet in Aries. Athletes and daredevil artists, however, should use this on-off pulse to sharpen their performance. It's intense.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

First smiles and sweet offerings as lovable Venus sextiles your Saturn ruler Saturday. This is the cue to go shopping. Later in the day, a phonecall or paperwork sets you back as retrograde Mercury gets into the act, confirming with a slightly different slant something you learned earlier in the week. Fierce Mars provokes your prudent Saturn ruler Wednesday and forces you to act (or react) with a vengeance. The problem is probably over a fourth house matter—real estate, an aging (or raging) parent or a crisis in the kitchen.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

You're still a magnet, drawing neighbors and siblings to your side all weekend. Whether you'll want them there on April 1 when Mars and Saturn meet—explode is more like it—is questionable. Unless you intend to referee their dispute. I don't know how you'll manage to stay away from the fray, but you are quite adept at charming your way in and out of any situation, especially on this fateful April Fools'. That's also the time you may be rewarded with snazzy, state-of-the-art stuff.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Steady as she goes, and thar she blows! Keep to the conservative course you've chosen and try to dowse the flames that flare up in the middle of next week. Although your finances are under attack, and what you acquire may no longer be your heart's desire, you don't have to become emotionally undone over a conflict of interest. Have faith that Jupiter in your sign for another 11 months will protect you from real harm, even from the frustrations and raging arguments that can arise from Saturn and Mars transiting your house of money and values.

MATZOH BALLS AND COLLARD GREENS...

Despite the recent discrimination lawsuit and charges that the restaurant practices a racist door policy, you could almost hear Ebony and Ivory playing in the background at Mistral's Black and White Passover Seder.

Officiating at the service was Rabbi Shmuel Iskovitz of Temple Bar Harbah, along with Cardinal Bernard Law and newly ordained Pentecostal minister B'Maynard Scarborough (whose whippet puppy, Rudi Blue, begged for scraps under the table). Provocateur talk show host Jerry Springer attended, along with a group of reformed neo-Nazis who questioned co-owner Seth Greenberg about which was more fabulous—South Beach or St. Barts—while his partner, Paul Roiff, chatted with a coterie of distinguished African-Americans that included Skip Gates, Cornel West, the Globe's Patricia Smith and the Rev. Peter Gomes. Also donning yarmulkes and reading from the Haggadah: baseball phenomenon Nomar Garciaparra, former New Kid on the Block Joey McIntyre, Back Bay doyenne Smoki Bacon (who quipped, "My name isn't kosher, but my butcher is"), chanteuse and daughter-of-Tony Antonia Bennett, Malden Mills CEO Aaron Fuerstein, gay divorcee Joan Kennedy, Tom Hamilton of Aerosmith and Barry and Eliot of Jordan's Furniture.

The prize for finding the afikomen—a slice of matzoh hidden during the meal—was a $5,000 gift certificate to Versace, which went to uber-attorney Alan Dershowitz, prompting one guest to mutter, "Just what that loudmouth needs—a loud wardrobe."

Overall, it was a deeply moving evening, with only one snafu: Elijah was turned away at the door. He didn't have a reservation.

JIM HENSON, R.I.P....

A veritable Who's Who turned out at the Wang Center for the opening night of the Boston Lyric Opera's newest production: The Barber of Sesame Street.

Commissioned by board members Lee Day Gillespie and Hod Irvine, the premier of the new work marked the operatic debut of Elmo, whose aria "I'm Sick of Tickling You" drew a standing ovation from an audience of diehard opera buffs, including Talbots CEO Arnold Zetcher, gazillionaires Ned and Lilly Johnson and Tom Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Staples Tom and Dola Stemberg, and arts patrons Cokie and E. Lee Perry, Joanne Dickinson, Esq. and her husband, Charles C. III, Linda Cabot Black and Florence Gerstein, not to mention several out-of-town enthusiasts, like eminence grise Walter Cronkite and Oprah "They Don't Call Me That For Nothin'" Winfrey.

Following the performance, a dinner was held at the Four Seasons, where various Muppets mingled with members of Boston's cultural and business elite.

"Oh God," groaned one guest, "Big Bird's gotten to the sherry." The evening's most amusing moment, however, came when the hotel's GM, Robin Brown, asked Ernie and Bert if they were lovers or just really good friends.

LOVE FOR SALE...

It was bound to happen. With the return of cigars and martinis, steaks and lounge culture, it was inevitable that someone would resurrect that other anachronism: the upscale whorehouse.

AVEZ-VOUS DISH?

Dirt? A Spectacular Social Occasion? Call J.S. at 859-1400 ext. 303

Jet-setty Mexican Juan-Diego Manuel de Gallardo Moreno-Thurlow and Italian roue Count Federico de Rossi de Monte Granita have done just that, opening a high-priced bordello called Madame Claude's (named for the famed Paris procuress) in a former convent on Beacon Hill.

The VIP opening attracted the usual stalwarts, like kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman, nightcrawling Euro-god Christophe Mueller, Panamanian Casanova Roberto Echevarria, restaurateur Chris Spann of Zinc, WBCN's Oedipus, Cambridge playwright David Mamet, architect Graham Gund and his wife, Anne, MFA director Malcolm Rogers, several Saudi sheiks, a Greek shipping magnate or two, the brother of the Sultan of Brunei and someone who claimed to be Michael Jackson's dermatologist.

They were entertained by a bevy of scantily clad beauties with names like Inga and Yvette, most of whom were recruited from European modeling agencies, who euphemistically referred to themselves as "hostesses" and outlined the services they were able to provide.

Out-suaving James Bond, glamor gym owner Adam Berke enticed a stunning redhead in a bikini to share a piano bench with him as he banged out a few Chopin nocturnes.

He then grabbed two glasses of champagne from a passing tray and offered one to his companion, but she refused, proving that you can lead a whore to culture, but you can't make her drink.

ALL THE PRESIDENT'S WOMEN....

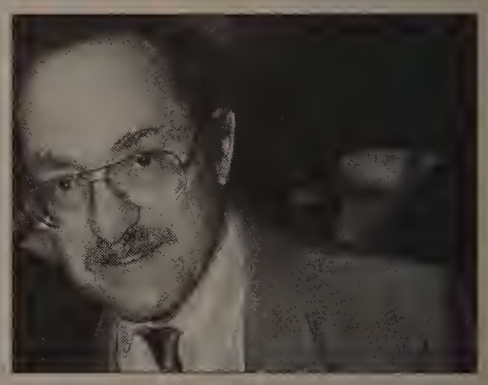
In New York and L.A., support goups have long been the chic place to network, socialize and develop important business and social contacts. Now it seems that Boston, always slow to pick up on a trend, is catching up.

The Billy Club is a group of women who gather in the basement of the Arlington Street Church on Tuesday nights, to share their experiences and commiserate about being former mistresses of the President.

Judging by their manner, not to mention their shoes, they include some of the city's most high-powered women. To avoid grand jury subpoenas, many of them understandably choose to wear disguises.

Nevertheless, several members were brave enough to forego the dark glasses and floppy hats at a recent meeting. Notable among them: naturally carbonated P.R. woman Doris Yaffe, cooking goddess Julia Child, TV news anchor Liz Walker and former IMPROPER BOSTONIAN editor Danielle Dubin.

"It's amazing to think that all of these women have slept with Clinton," marveled one.



"Oh, I didn't," said another. "I just come because there's no support group for Kennedy exes."

Oh, by the way — April Fool's. ✦

At The Wang Center's The Barber of Sesame Street: Above, Elmo and Kate Shamon.

Work Hard, Play Hard

It's taken me a while to figure out what makes me like THE IMPROPER so much and what makes me angry about it. I'm defnitely not a "clubgoer" or even a "young professional," but I live in the city, earn a very good living, like to go out and love to know what's going on around me. THE IMPROPER gives me that sense of being in on things. Without seeming to talk down to me, or be so "hip" that it's over my head, like some other publications that spring up around town. On the other hand, I often get a feeling that THE IMPROPER caters to a kind of superficial, party crowd that perhaps don't even have to work for a living. I'd like more articles directed to people who work (hard) all day, and want to spend their leisure time in something perhaps more gratifying—shall we even say intellectual?—than swilling champagne. Please try to include some stuff for the working stiffs.

I really must ask you not to print my name, although I've included it, because this is my private opinion, not something I want my whole office discussing. Thank you.

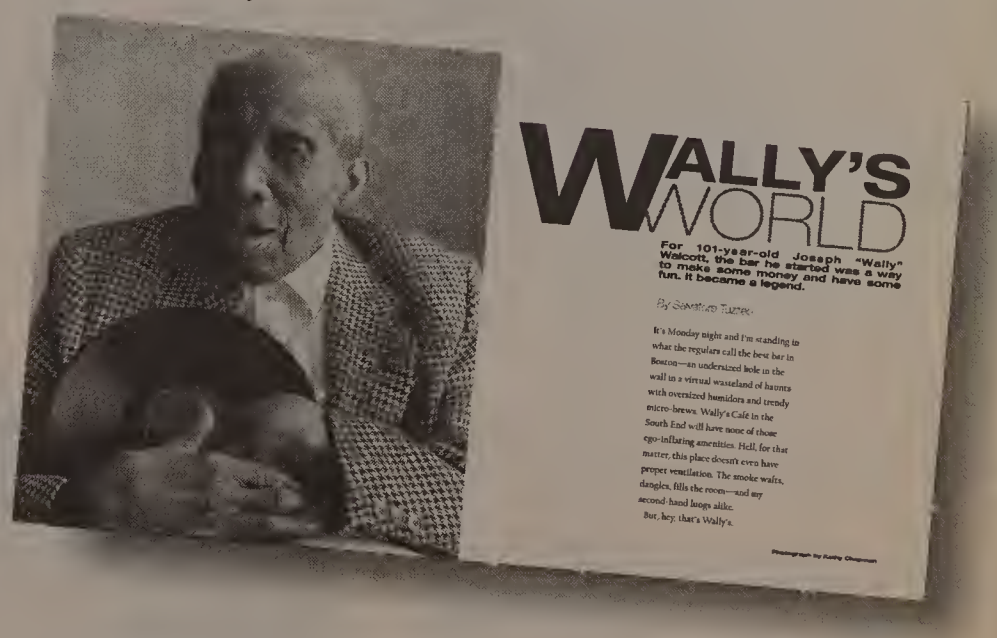
The Paws That Refreshes

Let me just say what a refreshing change it is to read a publication that has such a well defined attitude and hysterical point of view! Can I tell you that even though I basically spend my life commuting back and forth from Los Angeles to New York City that the high point of my month is time spent in Boston trying to get my paws on the latest IMPROPER BOSTONIAN (and not always an easy task, I may add).



Soroff's a riot, that Pia gets her products right, and your paper's pointers on all that's art and entertainment has yet to land me in Lamesville. I must read a gillion magazines a month. I'm an on-camera television reporter, so my appetite for all mediums is a bit disturbing (I hear magazine editors suffer from the same sort of disorder). But "hard news" ain't my gig. I report on fashion for Oprah Winfrey, conduct celebrity interviews for E! t.v., and track trends for Good Morning America. Basically keep the old guys up on what's new.

Primary Personalities

I doubt very much Maura Tierney ("From Hyde Park to Hollywood," March 25) would have been able to launch a successful career, and I'm certain THE IMPROPER would not have given her a cover, had not her father, Joe, been proved right about busing.

The funny thing is: Busing, court-ordered no less, created a political environment totally unlike our own, i.e., as reflected in Primary Colors. It was literally impossible to move from side to side, to morph as Travolta's Jack Stanton as Clinton does as a primary personality trait. You was either fo' it or agin' it, so to speak.

Tierney, to his credit, was agin' it, and he was right, and he conducted himself with dignity Stanton would never appreciate. Great genes too!

Still Real

Thanks to Salvatore Tuzzeo for "Wally's World" (March 25 issue). It must be the hippest spot in town, and it's not much bigger than a spot but then Boston is not known for its cool as its cold.

I am concerned, however, that publicity like the kind you gave Wally's will soon put in on the map whence will come busloads of camera snappers to see and feel the authentic, real thing. God bless their credit cards and let the travelers hang out at Cheers.

SUZANNE CLARK
South End

Editor's note: Wally's—with or without tourists—will surely remain as hip as ever, but regrettably, without Wally. Joseph "Wally" Walcott died, age 101, March 21, just hours after we went to press.

Celebrating Wally

This morning I picked up the latest issue of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and opened up to the table of contents. The first thing I noticed was the picture of Wally Walcott. It's amazing how things work—you write an article on the most famous jazz club owner in the history of Boston and it's published just days after his death.

I read the article and it was fabulous. I've never been in "Wally's" but I've heard stories from my musical peers who have been there and the joint is always jumpin'!

I hope his family and friends will have a special celebration in honor of a wonderful pioneer. Thank you for the article.

Sincerely,

PATRÉSHA GAYLE

Dr. Katz: None Too Sure Himself

Tom Snyder of Cambridge and Newton's Jonathan Katz write and produce the locally-made Dr. Katz Professional Therapist. On video at Videosmith.

ON THIS VIDEO OF DR. KATZ PROFESSIONAL THERAPIST, you can get a jumpy glimpse of the comedian-shrink, Jonathan Katz. The doc is featured as a low blood sugarish, not too secure psychologist who lives with his charmingly ineffectual son Ben. "Who is the patient here?" we have to ask ourselves as Dr. Katz goes "offstage" from his day of work and looks for advice from son Ben, a guy who lies around bending spoons with his mind (plastic ones he's put in the oven first.) Part-pedagogical dad, part therapist to his own son, leaking irritation that his son is such an overgrown baby, Dr. Katz tries to get Ben to remember where he left his father's precious Day Book (he used it to wedge the air conditioner, it turns out.) In the second episode on this video, his comedian/patient is Henny Youngman who uses the therapy hour to vend his schtick. The amusing anxiety that accompanies the characters' sweet depressiveness is conveyed through a sizzling wiggliness around their faces, a cartoonish tic. Their voices are draggy and low as if their lives were forever stuck on one long wet afternoon. Figuring out just why these loser types are so funny and so sympathetic is rather like figuring out why the self-obsessed characters on Seinfeld have won us over. It's just the way it is. Have your first appointment on video.

Everybody's favorite shrink has a new video.

Vintage now sells hearty, healthy footwear, too.

Sensible, But Often Sexy

Once the land of feather boas and frou-frou dresses, Vintage now sells shoes, but that hasn't changed the madcap flavor. 1798 Massachusetts Ave. in Cambridge. 497-1516.

SITCOM-ISHLY ENGAGING ELIZABETH LEFAVOUR SAYS of her store, Vintage, "It's all based on helping my bad back, which is all better." Better, thanks to the orthopedic, 'orgonomic' shoes she sells and wears, mostly Danish backed clogs. For those whose job is to stand and wait, do surgery or hair, these clogs cradle the foot and by extension, they soothe the back. Cook's shoes, they're sometimes called. Walk a mile, hell, a few feet in them, and get a feeling for the spooned-in feeling in your fect the ease of stance and the support they provide. The flex, and thc perkily arched arch, allow room to swivel and prowl. Those healthy, hiking Scandinavians and Germans are behind the Dansko, FinnComfortand Bästad footwcar at Vintage. The sexy Portania ones are French and the valiant Negev Sabra ones are Isracli. And are those clogs constructed! "They change the way you walk," says Lucy Throckmorton, Elizabeth's colorful sidckick. And Vintage sells washable polyurethane shocs called Anywear that can gct drowncd or worn "above the manure" then repcnt in the dishwasher. These come in colors as punkish as thc two shopkeepers. Adorable, too, are the little kids' clogettcs.

Songstress Wren Ross uses cabaret to the max.

Song Bird

Catch the torch songs of Wren Ross on April 11 at the Club Cafe in the South End, on May 17 at the Leventhal Sidman Jewish Center in Newton and in June at the Acton Jazz Cafe.

VERSATILE WREN, FOR 11 YEARS A CAST MEMBER IN Shear Madness, is in your mind's ear, whether you know it or not, as the voice of New England Telephone and many other commercials and voiceovers. Her pretty voice is full of conversational ease, tripping alongside the bubbling brook of the piano accompaniment. As demonstrated in her periodic appearances in the cozy cabaret of Club Cafe on Columbus Avenue, Wren can also hit a wistful tone, as in the song "My Brother Lived in San Francisco," which only requires that past tense to convey the message. There's a bluesiness-with-mischief in some of her repertoire, a singing against the usual grain. "I like to take a standard song and change the subtext," she says. And because of the intimacy of the cabaret style, Wren manages to tell stories in her songs, such as the one that begins with worldly bravado about a lost love and then moves, affectingly, to a hungrier longing for comfort and resolution of the affair. Something almost girlish, recalling the romantic heroine of The Fantasticks pulls against a more womanly, sadder-but-wiser trend in her singing, tugging you into her performance. And besides, she's a dish.

Loosely Speaking

MISS LONELYHEARTS HAS A FIRST NAME

Proving once again that good ideas travel well, Hazel's Cup And Saucer on Dartmouth Street in the South End has emulated a trendy New York counterpart, Drips, to become the first cafe in Boston to offer customers a dating service. Patrons fill out a blue or pink (get it?) index card listing qualities their ideal mate would have and give the card to the manager, who assigns a number to the card and posts it on the matchmaker board. No names or phone numbers are public. "When a lonelyhearts finds a card they're interested in," says Hazel's, management arranges the match. "We've had about seven dates already," said manager Doug Barbour last week, "and hear they've been pretty successful." Hazel's goal is to eventually publish a booklet of "personals," like Drips does. So far, said Barbour, the only drawback is "we need more females."

HURRY UP, ALREADY. WE'RE HUNGRY!

Since closing shop at Cafe Louis at the end of last year, chef Michael Schlow has been searching for an appropriate space in which to start another restaurant, and the rumors about where he plans to open have become so frequent as to be comical. The latest is that he bought Schroeder's, in the financial district.

Schlow

"False," Schlow says, "although I heard the same thing. Somebody else told me I'd bought the Noodle Bar. Somebody else told me I was going into the space that was Marquee. And another person said somewhere else. None of it is true."

"We're about two weeks away from signing a deal," he assures us, "As soon as we do, I'll let you know."

EYE KIA

Seems like Geo and Saturn dealerships in the New England area have a new force to reckon with. It's called Kia—a brand new car company from South Korea, a country with a great name in the automobile engineering field...not really—and, unlike the new Beetle, Kias have actually been spotted on the streets and in the right lanes of the expressway.

Kia

Kia currently sells two models—the Sephia, a compact sedan that starts at a mere $9,995 and the Sportage, a sport-utility vehicle in the spirit of the Geo Tracker, which runs a little more expensive at $14,895. All eight of the Kia dealerships in Massachusettes are realtively new—Kia of Framingham has been open less than a month.

BACK FROM HIATUS?

Charges of assault and battery against television reporter Mike Macklin were dismissed April 1, thus ending one chapter in the nightmare for the Channel 7 contributor who'd like his job back. Macklin has been off the air since the July 4 incident that led to his arrest and suspension, as noted in last issue's Loosely. He'd been charged based on claims by his girl friend made during a domestic dispute. She later recanted. No word yet on his reinstatement.

UP PARASOLS!

Ten years afer losing its outdoor umbrella-cafe license—the outcome of a disagreement between management and city bureaucrats—29 Newbury restaurant regains its permit this year, and will open its outdoor cafe in May, with umbrellas, a new wrought-iron fence and valet parking.

29 Newbury

BREASTS OR WINGS?

It's your call really, but at the new Hooters near North Station you can get an eyeful of one and a mouthful of another—just don't ask which of what—you already know the answer. Originally scheduled to open last October, the place caught fire, under suspicious circum-stances, the day before opening night and left many a bachelor longing for a glimpse of those large, succulent...hot-wings. The grand opening finally did take place on March 24 and quickly became all the rage for the fantasy-driven bachelor set.

THERE GOES THE NEIGHBORHOOD

Since the mid-eighties, restaurateurs Todd and Olivia English have been Charlestown's most famous residents and among its biggest boosters. Now comes the news that the couple is decamping for the suburbs. They've purchased a home in Brookline, reportedly with more space than their present digs and closer to the exclusive Park School, which their older child attends.

THE BEST LITTLE WHOREHOUSE IN BOSTON

After reading Jonathan Soroff's utterly fictitious April Fool's column (Last Scene Here) in our last issue, a staff member named Jacqueline at the Beacon Hill Times phoned to ask whether a brothel called Madame Claude's had actually opened in a former convent on Beacon Hill.

Upon learning that it was a practical joke, Jacqueline was "mortified," and sheepishly admitted, "You got us."

Meanwhile, Soroff received several irate calls from Puritans who thought the item was scandalous, as well as one from a respectable-sounding gentleman who wanted the bordello's phone number.

Newsflash for all of them: Prostitution is still illegal.

Meanwhile, elsewhere in the neighborhood of multiple eponymous publications, count one less: The year-old political newspaper Beacon Hill called it quits, citing lack of ad revenue. Editor Mark Leccese has joined the state Department of Public Health as public affairs director. But owner Alan Vandenburgh says he's convinced the concept works and now wants to raise money to publish similar papers throughout the country. Vandenburgh has hit paydirt before: With Steve Crosby, he created cable TV guides in the '80s that made millions.

All In The Family

Baseball's got Ken Griffey Sr. and Jr. The silver screen has Michael and Kirk Douglas. The latest in father and son affairs comes to us from Boston's own psychedelic rock outfit, MAX. A complete throwback to British psychedelia of the '60s and '70s, MAX was formed by New York transplant T-Max—who created the famous Boston-based fanzine, The Noise—and his son Izzy, 16, who plays the bass guitar and was homeschooled by his old man until the seventh grade. Their debut CD, titled Ride The Dove, is a solid effort and, they hope, the first of many. MAX will be promoting the CD at the MAX MANIA MARATHON on April 17 at the Central Square VFW at 9 pm.

Crabbie Come Home

An item in our February 11 City Haul averred there were, lamentably, no stone crabs imported by Boston restaurants. At least that was what our survey found. But lo! The Palm informs us it annually imports the South Florida delicacy, and, to make its case, served us a batch just recently. You have to ask for the critters, though. They aren't on the menu.

JUST SAY TO YOURSELF, I'M NOT WATCHING GOLF, I'M WATCHING HISTORY: Last year Tiger Woods demolished the field at the Masters. Woods became the youngest winner and the first African-American and the first Asian-American to put on the green jacket. In the process, the tournament scored record ratings. Live coverage from Augusta begins on USA network (Thursday and Friday, April 9 and 10, 4 pm, USA) and finishes on CBS (Saturday, April 11, 3:30 pm and Sunday, April 12, 4 pm, Channel 4).

GOTTA GET A NEW HAIRDO FOR THAT PASSPORT PHOTO: What better way for the gang at Friends (Thursday, April 9, 8 pm, Channel 7) to compete with Seinfeld's series finale than to throw a wedding. In a setup to the season closer, Ross (David Schwimmer) proposes to Brit girlfriend Emily (Helen Baxendale).

DUMB, DUMBER, DUMBEST: Steve Martin was the Jim Carrey of the 1970s. The wild-and-crazy one made the leap from TV to the big screen in 1979's The Jerk (Friday, April 10, 8 pm, Channel 38). Oh yes, some parts of the film are out-of-touch by today's sensitivities, but the story of the rise and fall of a simple idiot is filled with Martin's early standup bits.

LOCAL BOYS GONE BAD: Seems like the Mafia is second only to World War II as subject matter for these history channels. A&E's Target: Mafia (Saturday, April 11, 6 pm, A&E) takes a look at the mob's rise during the 1930s. Features a segment on Boston bootlegging.

HEY, THAT'S THE GUY FROM PLANET OF THE APES: ABC is rebroadcasting the Cecil B. DeMille 1956 extravaganza The Ten Commandments (Sunday, April 12, 7 pm, Channel 5). Part historical retelling, part campy fashion show, the Oscar-winning film starred everyone from Charlton Heston (as Moses) to Yul Brynner, Anne Baxter and Edward G. Robinson.

WATCHING TV IS A FORM OF EXERCISE: Once again, the local affiliates are gearing up for live coverage of the 102nd running of the Boston Marathon (Monday, April 20). The race begins at noon with the wheelchair division starting at 11:45 am.

Beauty & TRUTH

Colonial Drug: Hard soaps with a soft sell.

The Little Shop of Wonders

When I was a wee little Boston babe, Mommy and I would stumble over the hippies and Bob Dylan lookalikes who carpeted Harvard Square, to my favorite shop: Colonial Drug. This tiny, ye oldc-style pharmacy was packed to the ceilings with primo cosmetics and skin care goodies. As my girly eyes drifted over the fancy perfumes, Mason Pearson hair brushes, swanky soaps and more, a junky lust for beauty was born that continues to this day. Don't step in if you don't want to catch the bug like I did!

Today, Colonial Drug is still the place to grab the most talked-about and hardest to find products. They stock classic stuff like Geo. F. Trumper grooming implements and shampoos, Roger Gallet soaps and tonics and the complete line of Kneipp high-powered bath additives. And, still way ahead of other beauty booths, this fine pharmacy introduced Boston to Leclerc's flawless face powders, English Idea's highly regarded line of lip treatments and Lydia O'Leary's Covermark Make-up—the only cosmetic that truly covers hard-to-hide birth marks and other unwelcome spots without the heavy, mask-like feel of Derma-blend and its ilk.

Still searching for a signature scent that reeks only of you? Or looking to replace a discontinued colgne? Don't fret, pet—consult the Colonial D. nose patrol. Their trained staff of scent shrinks can find you a fresh bottle of your fave fragrance that department stores can't—just like a traditional pharmacy in France, but with New England accents. Generous with the samples, the Colonials know that finding a fragrance is just as hard as finding the perfect mate.

Luxuriantly classic is how you will feel after using their lusciously Deco-packaged Claus Porto soaps. These huge bars won't melt in the tub, thanks to an old-fashioned manufacturing process that keeps big things solid, and they lather better than Mr. Bubble in a blender.

Colonial Drug offers a concise collection of the finest hair-care products in the world, including tester-adored brands such as Phyto, Kingsley, Lazartique, Leonor Greyl.

Geez, I could just about go on forever, but you'd miss the next Red Line to Harvard Square. Colonial Drug is located at 49 Brattle Street, next door to Harnett's. Call (617) 864-2222 for more info—and don't forget to bring your checkbook. Just like the old days, they don't accept credit cards. Cute!

LIGHT, BRIGHT AND DYN-O-MITE

When you use a paler eyeshadow on your eyelids, your whole face opens up. Your peepers look cleaner and more focused; the honesty of your eyeshape comes forth. Forget last year's dark and muddled, victim look: 1998 is the year to lighten up!

Here are some tips for every Bright Eye Betty to try:

 Prime the lids with a concealer: it's just the ticket for dark-lidded lassies.

 Avoid that dusty lash look: Always apply eyeshadows before you cake on the mascara.

 You go, gamine girl! By using a fair shadow all over, and applying eyeliner only to the upper lids, you look like sweet-faced, accessible Audrey Hepburn.

 Want a denser layer of shadow? Use a barely-dampened, clean shadow sponge applicator on your shadow and then apply. Your colors stay on longer and look more intense—it's the liquid eyeliner theory.

 Lighten your once-dark shadow. In the palm of your hand, rub together generous amounts of pale powder with dotted-in darker shades. When you hit the tint you crave, apply.

Here are the shadows the testers and I love. They stay where you put them without flaking or caking:

 Prescriptives has the biggest collection of lighter shades that suit ALL skintones. The most versatile line of all, Prescriptives shadows go on sheer or heavy and stay put—they're perfect.

Who says it's dark in the shadows? Pale eyes light up springtime.

 Yves Saint Laurent eyeshadows have by far the most powerful pigments. YSL is for the serious make-up gals who know how to apply. Once Yves climbs aboard your lids, he stays.

 Origins and Trish McEvoy both have beautiful shades and are great for those who want a wash of color. On a budget? Wet and Wild eyeshadows were voted best in the El Cheapo Drugstore category by our penny-pinching testers.

STRAIGHT, AND OUT OF THE CLOSET

If your straight hair craves shine without drying, hydration without the way-down greasy look—honey, have we found a line for you:

Alterna's shampoo, conditioners and styling aids leave straight hair hyper-shiny, frizz-free and touchable, celebrating linear locks. Their new Hemp line didn't get us high, but the sheen it left on color-treated, drier hair types was buzz enough for the testers.

Straight hair makes a beeline for beauty thanks to these Alterna-potions.

Alterna is ideal for daily shampooers, even with its high-end price tag of 14-18 bucks a bottle. Because you use half the amount you'd squeeze out of econo-priced products, it ends up costing the same as cheaper brands—except, unlike most bargain 'poos, Alterna actually works.

Many salons carry this line. Call 1-888-4-ALTERNA for directions to an appropriate scissor palace near you.

MOVIES

Journey to the Heart

By Betsy Sherman

Wang's Chinese Box is intense human drama set in hybrid love-hate Hong Kong

OBJECTIVITY REGARDING CHINESE BOX is difficult for me. It's a movie I feel virtually lashed to. I was in Hong Kong for part of the time during which it takes place, the six months leading to the British colony's handover to China on July 1, 1997. And like the movie's protagonist, I am obsessed with Hong Kong's East-West hybrid culture (in my case, the entryway was Hong Kong cinema). But I feel confident in praising director Wayne Wang's achievement, which opens in theaters May. He has turned mixed feelings about his homeland's future into an audacious, eloquent film that can speak powerfully even to those who have no ties to Hong Kong through ethnicity or passion.

Chinese Box's kinetic mix of documentary and fiction is held together by a daredevil performance by Jeremy Irons. As a dying British journalist who yearns for an understanding of Hong Kong and the love of a Chinese barmaid, Irons arrives at an emotional rawness that feels lived in, not acted out.

Wang, a Hong Kong native, became a leading light of American indie film with the 1982 Chan Is Missing. He's best known for The Joy Luck Club and Smoke, but moves between polished work and films with a rougher feel. For his "love-hate letter" to Hong Kong, Wang interwove story sources (working with screenwriters Jean-Claude Carrière (and Larry Gross) and left room for improvisation. He chose Yugoslavian cinematographer Vilko Filac for the handheld camerawork. The multi-textured film is a mosaic held together by the point of view of the outsider protagonist.

John (Irons) is a financial writer who, although he can afford better, lives in a narrow apartment in a cramped downtown neighborhood. Chinese objects are scattered among his tools of high-tech journalism. Amid the anxiety about the changeover of Hong Kong to a capitalist territory under Communist control, John finds out he has a form of leukemia that has entered his brain. He takes to the streets with a camcorder in quixotic search of the secret of the fragile/strong city. John's sounding board is a wisecracking photographer played by Rubén Blades.

John/Wang's metaphors include the beating heart of a fish sliced open at a market stall and a pitbull who runs on a treadmill. John sees the city personified in a hustler played by Maggie Cheung (Irma Vep). She's brash and resourceful, but hides the scarred of side of her face. John wades through her sensationalistic anecdotes to get to the truth about her past trauma.

The tangible object of John's desire is the elegant Vivian (Gong Li), a mainlander who runs a bar backed by her businessman lover (Michael Hui). The urgency of John's plight overrides his somewhat buffoonish stance as the Westerner who covets the Chinese goddess. When he finds out his ideal woman has been a prostitute, John's gut reaction is anger at her demure rejection.

Gong Li (Raise the Red Lantern) is more than just a picture-perfect emblem of unknowable China, sacred and profane. Although her English is tentative, the actress gives us what we need to know about Vivian through her carriage—the way she wipes glasses, even—and her serene mask of a face. In a transcendent scene, Vivian watches Marlene Dietrich on TV singing "Black Market" and mimics the star's insouciance. In the background, John is framed in a doorway between these two self-invented survivors.

The aesthetics of Chinese Box—expressionistic bursts of color and sound, impressionistic montages—reflect the subconscious of the protagonist and the city. As John's disease brings on hallucinations, Hong Kong barrels towards July 1 in its usual high gear. Here, survival of the fittest is part of everyday life (Wang's previous Hong Kong film was called Life Is Cheap...but Toilet Paper Is Expensive). The intellectual John takes an internal journey from his head—which literally fails him—to his heart. Wang preserves a distance born of ambivalence, even as his cast plays out a moving human drama. ✦

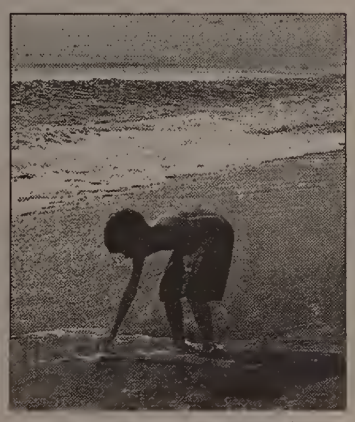
AD HOC



Duck's Coup

By Tom Weisend

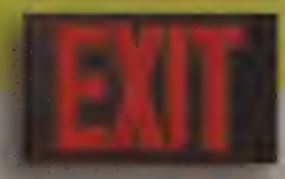
Points are scored when ridicule of the plastic parks and tourist traps begin

UPON HEARING THAT A PERSON wearing a big yellow duck suit was Massachusetts' new ad hook to lure tourists, my skepticism sensor nearly deafened me. The Massachusetts Office of Travel & Tourism spends at least $5 million annually, some of it our money, to entice people to come visit. And some cuddly duck creature, thought I, is likely to be a foul attempt (sorry).

Imagine my surprise, then, when I saw the ads and realized that Ducky—as this refugee from a fictional theme park called "Ducky World" is named—is a piece of perfect casting. He's the antidote to pre-fab Disneyesque vacations that detour people away from us.

The ads tout 'real' souvenirs.

Since the $2.5-million TV and print campaign doesn't run in Massachusetts (they've already got their hooks in us) and we're helping to finance it, here's a brief blow-by-blow. Ducky arrives on a bus somewhere in Massachusetts, disembarking in a picturesque town square. We hear him reading from a postcard he's writing to his little friends back at Ducky World. Upon his visit to Boston, he notes, "The buildings here have more than one side." At the beach, he exclaims, "The wave pool is huge." When he enters the Cheers bar on Beacon Hill and is welcomed with a greeting that would warm Norm Peterson's heart, he deduces, "People here are so friendly" (it's advertising, it doesn't have to be true). The ad zeroes in on what Massachusetts has to offer Busch Gardens-weary travelers: a sense of the real.



The writing is what saves this campaign. At first glance, Ducky appears to be the horrible result of some unholy coupling of Disney's Donald with that unsettling teddy bear from the Snuggle fabric-softener ads. And his voice is so sugary that those concerned with elevated blood-glucose levels should beware. Points are scored when the ridicule of the plastic parks of the South and West begins. When Ducky appears to be at Jordan Hall, he marvels that the orchestra is comprised of live humans, not mechanical animals. A print ad shows a young boy collecting shells on the beach, with a headline reminding readers, "Not all souvenirs come with a registered trademark."

This is a refreshing approach to bring people to the Bay State. Tourism is a multi-billion dollar industry in Massachusetts—the biggest on Cape Cod. Without those foreign license plates we all swear at as we wait in a traffic jam to get to the Bourne Bridge in July, there would be more unemployment, higher taxes and less fun. At least, that's what the tourism office maintains.

Ad agency Holland Mark Martin Edmund, in its first attempt for the tourism office, nearly hits this one out of the park. One minor misstep is Ducky's omission from the print ads, which use big pictures and look at lot like those from the other 49 states. The humor doesn't carry as sharply as in the TV spots. Previous Massachusetts tourism work focused on the beauty and history found here. Slogans like the fife-and-drum underscored "The spirit of Massachusetts is the spirit of America" and gorgeous but sterile "We'd love to show you around" didn't go as far. This "Ducky" work gets to show off the beauty and history of the state, but propels the message further by using a touch of irony, challenging people to forsake the safe Disney route for a Bay State adventure. This ugly Ducky is an advertising swan. ✦

Guitarist Tony Levin grew up in Brookline.

MUSIC

Tony Levin's Loose Cannon

By Paul Robicheau

The bassist and his group take an experimental turn this time around

BASSIST TONY LEVIN IS A MUSICAL chameleon. He likes changing colors, from international innovations with art-rockers Peter Gabriel and King Crimson to folkier recordings with Boston singer-songwriters Catie Curtis, Ellis Paul, Barbara Kessler and Paula Cole, gracing Cole's acclaimed This Fire.

"I'm not that much a fan of bass playing as I am of music," says the Brookline-bred Levin, who plays House of Blues April 19 with Bruford Levin Upper Extremities (B.L.U.E.), a group he leads with drummer Bill Bruford, his rhythmic foil in King Crimson for 18 years and running.

But of course it's Levin's command of the bass—from basic four-string model to the 12-string Chapman stick—that have earned him notoriety, from esteemed studio gigs to creative fame with Gabriel and Crimson.

"I always played the bass, pretty much from the day the earth cooled—since my days at Brookline High," laughs Levin, 51, who went to Eastman School of Music and delved into classical music and jazz before settling on rock and moving to New York. "Because I was a very good player and could read music, I kept getting offers to do studio work, and started taking them to pay the bills," he says. But while he made records with such greats as Paul Simon and John Lennon, Levin aspired to more.

"Working as a studio musician, doing a great number of albums, is more of a craft than an art," Levin says. "It was doing the opposite of inspiring me...My nature is suited for a little more struggle and artistic input."

Levin found more input with Gabriel, with whom the bassist has recorded and toured since the ex-Genesis singer began his solo career in 1977. With Gabriel, Levin expanded the profile of the Chapman stick, fingering rubbery sounds through four-handed tapping on its wide fretboard. "I approached it as a different kind of tool as a bass player," Levin says. "I had the fortune to be heard a lot. I played it on 'Shock The Monkey' with Peter Gabriel and millions of people were hearing that sound whether they knew it or not."

A tip from Gabriel also helped Levin develop "funk fingers," drumstick-like finger extensions for percussive playing. And Levin took all those techniques a step further in King Crimson. He has played in that veteran prog-rock group's two latest editions with Bruford and guitarists Adrian Belew and founder Robert Fripp. But while Crimson has subdivided from its recent double-trio incarnation in search of fresh ideas (Bruford and Levin were both in a first, all-improvised offshoot called ProjeKct One), the group's long-time rhythm partners also took a shot at their own project.

"In a way, we're the loose cannon end of the Crimson stage," says Levin, noting he tries to be as spontaneous and unpredictable as Bruford. He set open parameters along those lines for Bruford Levin Upper Extremities, recording at his Woodstock home, where he even had Bruford bang on a derelict piano in the garage with mallets. "I was crouched beneath him with a microphone," Levin says. "Bits of rust were falling on my head as he was playing. I jump at the chance to get musicians out of the studio."

Despite such interludes and other rhythmic experiments, much of the CD features the quartet coming to House of Blues, rounded out by avant-jazz guitarist David Torn (a master of electronic loops) and trumpeter Chris Botti, whose spare melodies suggest Miles Davis jamming with Crimson.

"To conceive an album with instrumental players, I try to just give them the setting to do what they do the best," says Levin, who released the CD on his home label Papa Bear, and painted the cover art. It's available only by mail order (800-688-2227 or www.papa bear.com), though Levin is doing an in-store at Tower Records-Boston from 5-7 pm on April 20.

"I like that it's a well-kept secret, and that the occasional person who stumbles onto my record finds something that's really direct from the musicians," says the bass explorer. "I can put out what I want." ✦

THE DISH

Caffe Pitino to Come?

By Nini Diana

Chef McCarthy readies Evoo... Southern comfort coming...Easter eats

YOU'D THINK IT WOULD BE ENOUGH for a man to come sweeping into town, the hopes of the city riding on his shoulders, and save our poor basketball team from another season of embarrassing losses. But no, our man of the year, Rick Pitino has ventured into the pasta business, sauces available at your local store. And now, rumor has it, Pitino has signed a lease for the old Grill and Cue on Commercial Street, and plans to open a restaurant. Pitino wouldn't comment and aides in his office were vague, though other sources in the community seem certain it will happen. What's the word I'm looking for, megalomania?

Who's the freshest Samantha?

This year's nominees for the James Beard Foundation are really no surprise. Susan Regis of Biba, fast becoming the Susan Lucci of the culinary world, plus Ken Oringer of Clio and Frank McClelland of L'Espalier. What is surprising is that some of Boston's more outstanding chefs were left off the ballot, namely, Stan Frankenthaler of Salamander, Ana Sortun of Casablanca and Raymond Ost of Sandrine's. While the Beard awards are perhaps the most prestigious in the country they are, like every other award show that gets its nominees by secret ballot, subject to personal rather than objective tastes.

About a year ago, the Bostonian hotel had a mass exodus of its finer-cooking staff. One of the former employees, chef Peter McCarthy is now set to open his own place. Evoo (acronym for extra virgin olive oil) will open near the beginning of May at the corner of Kirkland and Beacon streets on the Somerville/Cambridge line. McCarthy has done a good deal of work revamping the space with designer Sandra Fairbank, who has decorated the likes of Anago and Hamersley's. The 77-seat restaurant will feature a mix of the latest hot/cool taste: Mediterranean.

Due for a facelift is the Marketplace Grill in Faneuil Hall, which will reopen in mid-April as Shenandoah, a southern-style restaurant. The three-story space will also house the Brewskellar in, you guessed it, the basement, and the Marketplace Café on the ground level. Shenandoah's chef, James Mohn, has been with the restaurant group for eight years and expects to bring it smoothly into its new 'Southern comfort' food theme.

Everyone thinks they look like a celebrity. It's a misconception we all live with. I'm sure I look like Sharon Stone. But, if you still yearn for affirmation that you were destined for more than anonymity now's your chance. Fresh Samantha is holding a look-alike contest in conjunction with the 5th Annual EarthFest on the Esplanade April 25. If you don't know, the goal is to look like the wild haired cartoon on the juice bottles. The promotion is meant to draw support for the Fresh Samantha's new juice line, Super Juice. Entries with your photo can be mailed to Prudential Center, P.O. Box 132, Boston, 02199.

Well, I feel compelled to mention Easter and if you're looking for something to do, here are a few of the restaurants willing to do it for you. Maison Robert, Clio, Le Meridien and the Top of the Hub all have a brunch special. Formaggio Kitchen will put together the whole shebang for Easter or Passover, and Henrietta's Table will assemble baskets, made to order.

And finally, if you're strapped for lunch ideas call 703-648-7777. You won't be sorry. ✦

DINING

Hamersley's Cachet

By J. Charles Mokriski

Creative, imaginative but classical, the South End bistro remains remarkable

REVIEWING HAMERSLEY'S BISTRO IS daunting. Its name comes up repeatedly on lists of top 10, top five or even top restaurant in the city. Even after its substantial expansion and move across the street four years ago, it lost none of its cachet as one of "the" places to dine. This could not have been clearer one recent Saturday evening, when we arrived just before opening time at 5:30, thinking we would beat the crowds.

Wrong. Hamersley's small lobby was already thronged with enthusiastic gourmands. A striking print of Mozart at the top of the stairs was a harbinger of hospitality. We were delighted to see a handicapped elevator being put to good use by a wheelchair-bound patron.

Hamersley's is a big restaurant, accommodating almost 120 in all. A small room to the right of the entrance seats 20, with the remainder in the huge main dining room, with high beamed ceilings, pale yellow brick walls and an open kitchen along one wall.

Hamersley's wine list is large and varied, with a good number of choices in the $20 to $30 range, and, surprisingly for a restaurant of this status, one bottle at $19. We chose a 1992 Domaine Tempier ($35) from Bandol, the home of southern France's most distinguished reds. Largely derived from the Mourvedre grape, this is a mellow but full flavored wine, with a delightfully fruity bouquet.

First courses at Hamersley's are creative and imaginative, but with a touch of classicism that avoids the bizarre, overwrought combinations attempted in some quarters. A salad of radicchio, endive and chicory with warm, crispy goat cheese and hazelnuts ($8.50) featured crisp, refreshing greens, in a lively, nutty dressing, with a generous chunk of tangy goat cheese. Pot au feu and layered root vegetable Napoleon ($9.50) pushed the envelope on complexity, with fork tender beef, intensely flavored turnips and a dollop of creamy horseradish—a hearty meal for a wet, raw, winter night.

Roasted quail with foie gras, dried cherries, a poached egg and wilted greens ($18) seemed pricey for the minuscule morsel of foie gras, but the ensemble was a triumph in conception and execution. The semi-boned quail was moist and tender, and the cherries gave a hint of tartness that married well with the richness of the foie gras. Best of all, the delicious, dark sauce became enriched with the yoke from the poached egg. The total impact of the dish was so substantial it could have been a main course. Hamersley's returns to its bistro origins with a crock of old-fashioned, French onion soup gratin ($8.50), in which the sweetness of the onions and nutty flavor of the cheese combined with the strong meat essence of the broth to delight the palate and warm the soul.

Main courses sustained the same high standards set by the appetizers. Traditional cassoulet ($24) contained chunks of tender, intensely flavorful lamb and superb duck confit, with a good crusted finish. Glorious white beans and a rich, garlicky sauce transported us to Toulouse. In a minor quibble, we found the sausage bland, the carrots overcooked. Steamed clams and linguine with smoked bacon and swiss chard ribs ($24) arrived as a huge bowl of plump, tender but resilient clams, generous chunks of smokey bacon, and intriguingly citric-bitter chard, which we took at first for rhubarb. Our skepticism at this combination was soon dispelled, and we devoured every morsel, down to the clamshells. Hamersley's signature dish is roast chicken ($23), wherein the lowly chicken is elevated to new heights, redolent of garlic and lemon, and accompanied by perfectly textured wedges of roast potatoes and a large, tender braised onion. It more than lived up to its advance billing.

Desserts (all $8), while not at the level of the dishes that preceded them, were more than satisfactory. Warm apple caramel cobbler with vanilla ice cream was served in a soufflé dish, with crumbly, buttery pastry, super-rich ice cream, firm apples and a hearty dose of cinnamon. The mocha meringue mousse cake with coffee créme anglaise came in three layers, a chocolate cookie/cake base, a thick chocolate mousse in the middle and a cool, refreshing coffee nougat glaze on top. Lemon soufflé, described by our waiter as a house specialty, was a moist but light confection with an engagingly zesty sauce.

Service at Hamersley's is efficient and professional, although not altogether accommodating. For example, we asked that the pasta entree be divided into two, and it arrived in a single bowl with a side plate so that we could do it ourselves. On a subsequent evening I observed the same phenomenon at a neighboring table. Still, for a restaurant that prepares and serves so many things so well, what is remarkable is not that things are not flawless, but that they are as good as they are. ✦

BEER

No Skunks

By Peter R. Terhune

Learn the danger signs of beer that's gotten old, stale and smelly

THERE'S NOTHING QUITE LIKE CRACKING open a cold beer, taking a sip and realizing that you've got a mouthful of swill. I'm not talking about flavors strong or unfamiliar, but a taint that manifests itself as eau d'skunque, soggy cardboard or over-cooked vegetables. These are hallmarks of beer that has been over-exposed to light and/or heat, or languished unsold for the better part of a year and begun to deteriorate. Sadly, there's no way to resurrect beer that's gone bad. You can, however, learn the stale beer danger signs.

First, look for freshness dating. Among craft brewers "best by" dating pre-dominates. This tells you at a glance how long the brewery thinks its beer is good for; three to six months is typical. Then there's "born on" dating, which tells you the day the beer was packaged, thereby letting you make the decision as to whether you think it's fresh. This requires doing a little math, of course. Most brewers instruct their distributors to pull beer that's exceeded the recommended shelf-life; beermakers know if you try their beer and it's in poor condition you may never purchase it again.

Not all brewers freshness date. Some feel their beer sells fast enough so it's not an issue, others contend that their product has enough alcohol or yeast in solution to afford ample protection on the shelf (viz., many Belgian brands). Very few imported beers carry a freshness date. Certain well known brands sell so briskly that it's not an issue. Others, however, would have their age betrayed if they bore a date; an area retailer told me that he once received a two-year-old shipment of Amstel. One hallmark of old beer: a wet card-board aspect, caused by oxygen introduced during packaging. Occasionally you'll come across microbial infection, whose calling card is haze, sourness and/or gushing. Protect yourself from old beer by steering clear of dusty bottles. When in doubt, ask the package store staff if they move much of the product in question. And if you've got questions after you open the bottle, bring that beer back; most retailers will offer credit toward your next purchase.

Of course, beer is so perishable that even a six-pack well within "code" can be spoiled (a valid critique of freshness dates); it's even possible that the damage occurred while the beer was in your possession. Light breaks down certain hop oils, infusing the beer with a skunky smell. Beer in a clear glass bottle exposed to direct sunlight begins to "skunk" almost instantly; in green glass, five seconds. Brown glass affords about one minute's worth of protection. Prevent skunking by keeping beer in a dark place. Since fluorescent lights emit the same beer-spoiling wavelength as sunlight, I eschew six-packs sitting right next to the bulb when I pull beer from a coldbox. And I steer clear of "green-glass brands" unless they come in a light-foiling package. For the record, some brewers like Miller use a "pre-isomerized" hop extract that offers a modicum of protection to its clear glass brands; even these will skunk over time.

Heat is another enemy of beer. Temperature fluctuations (say from room temperature to 140°F and back again, a la a car trunk on a hot day) can cause flakes to form, making your beer look like a souvenir "snow-ball." Heat can also caramelize sugars, plus lead to flavors reminiscent of creamed corn or garbage. That said, I once had a Budweiser that had been left in a basement for four years, and subjected to innumerable hot/cold cycles. Big surprise: It tasted really good! The years had taken off the beer's green apple tang, and imparted a sweet maltiness—which doesn't diminish the importance of freshness, but sure makes me respect Anheuser-Busch's brewers. ✦

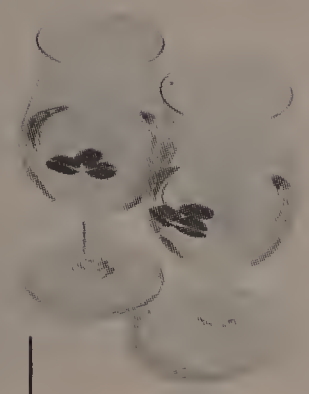
By JONATHAN SOROFF



Soroff/ On SYLVIA SIDNEY

SHE'S BEEN CALLED "THE QUEEN MOTHER," "A MESS IN A DRESS" AND "THE most vulgar transvestite ever" and—readers be forewarned—Sylvia doesn't mince words. Long before cross-dressing went mainstream, Sylvia Sidney was performing in drag. The 68-year-old Roxbury native first took to the stage in 1946, although he supported himself as a banquet waiter at area hotels and even belonged to Local 24. He's been sent to prison twice (once, for an attempted bank robbery while dressed in drag), offended countless audiences and achieved legendary status. Despite health problems, he still performs weekly at Jacques, in Bay Village, where Jonathan Soroff found him in his dressing room, putting on makeup and muttering at the mirror, "What a fuckin' old mess! I don't believe this, you bitch! You're still workin', too!"

Jonathan Soroff: The Bitch of Boston. Who named you that?
Sylvia Sidney: I did. When I was 16 years old, I started doing drag at a bar called Rick's Cafe—a real dump—and... (interrupts herself to tell a co-worker that the Crown and Anchor, a legendary gay bar in Provincetown, has burnt to the ground)...that was that.
JS: What's your real name?
SS: Sidney Solomon Sushman.
JS: A nice Jewish boy? Were you bar mitzvahed?
SS: I should hope so.
JS: What did your parents think of your career choice?
SS: My mother said, "They pay you to act like a meshugenah?" I said, "Yeah, Ma." She used to help me make my gowns, sewn by hand.
JS: Have you ever played Vegas?
SS: I was there in September, way out in the boondocks. Wayne Newton was there, and Joan Rivers. I made $700 in tips. That's all I remember, but it was fabulous. Packed to the rafters.
JS: Who's the most famous person you ever slept with?
SS: Oh, my lord. Nobody.
JS: Define glamour.
SS: Well, I'm glamorous, when I wanna be. But technically, I'm not what you'd call a drag queen. I make fun of drag queens, because they wanna be women. I don't. I'm a man, and I like being me.
JS: What do you think about drag going mainstream, with performers like RuPaul and the Lady Chablis?
SS: Good luck to 'em. It's sort of sad that it's no longer taboo, but I'm still outrageous.
JS: What's one thing a true lady always does?
SS: How should I know? Put on makeup?
JS: What's one thing a true lady never does?
SS: Go around telling everybody who she fucked. Keep it to yourself! Unlike that little asshole who blew the president and then told 15 of her girlfriends.
JS: You've had a lot of medical problems. Ever think about retiring?
SS: Many times, but my public won't let me.
JS: Which is more uncomfortable: high heels or clip-on earrings?
SS: Well, high heels are lovely, but I haven't worn them since 1985, because I have diabetes and I've had surgery—I have no toes left.
JS: Shouldn't you have a throne?
SS: Oh, I do, every Gay Pride Day, outside the Eagle (a bar on Tremont Street). Y'know, I was in the very first Gay Pride Parade, but the lesbians objected, because they thought I was too crude.
JS: Was Divine a colleague or a competitor?
SS: I'm glad she's dead, that bitch. She saw me onstage in Provincetown and she stole my whole act—being loud, vulgar and coarse. I hope she rots in hell.
JS: What color lipstick do you wear?
SS: Red. Whore Red, my dear.
JS: What's your bra size?
SS: Oh, I don't know. I just put the tits on and that's it.
JS: What do you do to relax?
SS: Sniff a little Rush...I have a trick comin' over tomorrow I haven't seen in 14 years. Otherwise, I just stay home and mind my own business.
JS: How do you keep your girlish figure?
SS: Oh, you flatter me.
JS: Judy Garland—saint or slut?
SS: I met her once at the Boston Garden and said, "My darling, I am the queen of Boston." She said, "Then I'm the king. How do you do, sister?" I met 'em all—Liberace was a fan, used to come see my show in Florida, and Gloria Gaynor. I once told Rita Hayworth to kiss my ass, and I told Carol Channing to go fuck herself. She was doing Lorelei, across the street from the club where I was working. One night, a limousine pulls up and she says, in that annoying sing-song voice, "Who are you?" And I say, "Who are you?" She says, "I'm Carol Channing," and I told her, "Go blow it out your ass." She swore like a sailor—not a lady, that one.
JS: Ever been in love?
SS: I had a lover for 38 years.
JS: What's the biggest change you've seen in 52 years as a performer?
SS: Well, the queens of today lip-synch. We never did that.
JS: Are you a good hostess?
SS: I once had a party where I served cat food spread on crackers, decorated with pimiento. They ate it. They loved it. They had no idea.
JS: Ever dance with J. Edgar Hoover?
SS: I wish. She was a lady.
JS: Who were you in a past life?
SS: Someone in the court of Queen Nefertiti.
JS: Ever feel like you're ovulating?
SS: No.
JS: What's next for you?
SS: Probably the grave. ✦

SCOTTY PILLA

I've been in fights before. Bar fights mostly. Sometimes I won—which basically means I got out alive, unbroken, unscathed and, thank god, unapprehended. Sometimes I lost, though, and ended up with, all totaled: two black eyes, 22 stitches, a broken little finger and a foot smashed in three places. Not to mention a couple of sleepless nights in the cooler.

But you should've seen the other guy.

Actually if the "other guy" were any of the following Bostonians then I wouldn't be writing this—I'd probably still be in a full body cast, watching reruns of Charles In Charge and drinking my meals through a straw. Which would give breakfast in bed a whole new meaning.

SCOTTY PILLA, Bouncer, Avalon

Scotty Pilla doesn't want to hurt you. In fact, the 30-year-old bouncer would much rather spend his time helping you out—maybe giving you a wet paper towel if you're getting sick in the bathroom, possibly talking you through a tough time in your life and even patting you on the back if you're just depressed. "I just try to treat people the way that I would want to be treated," the philosophical 6-foot-2 bouncer waxes. "The first couple years I was here there were a lot of fights, but I basically tried to build a rapport with people and now I get people thanking me for helping them out of a tough time."

That's not to say that he can't hurt you. "When it gets rough, sure, I can throw," Pilla says bluntly.

This five-year doorman—now head of security for one of the biggest and most popular clubs in the Boston area—has had his fair share of inebriated beer brawls and has always come out on the winning end. "When it gets hairy in here you just have to pull together with your brothers and get through it," says the 220-pounder.

Just don't judge his character by the pain he can instill on you.

Judge him by all the times he's made his people—his family, as he says—feel special...good about themselves. "I give much respect to our customers and I love these people and would do anything to help them out of a jam and that's helped me out as well," says Pilla. "If I know a patron is in the hospital I'll go and see them."

As one would imagine, Scotty Pilla has had a number of dangerous moments over the years. "I had a situation once where a guy pulled a gun on me in a parking lot, but when I turned to leave I had 17 guys asking me if I was all right—it's like a brotherhood in here."

EDWARD LODER, Firefighter, Rescue Co.1

If you think 49-year-old Edward Loder is too old for this list—too old to be a tough guy—then you're dead wrong. For more than 25 years this Bostonian has been charging headfirst into infernos to save lives. He's seen some of the most harrowing, hair-raising incidents and has never been deterred from doing his job.

After years as a fireman Loder headed over to Rescue Co. 1, an elite specially trained unit of firefighters, to up the stakes. "In Rescue 1 we are trained in HAZMAT (hazardous materials), we can go into buildings for four to five hours with the masks as opposed to the normal two hours, and we deal with every type of structure and every type of rescue," Loder says.

Loder has even rapelled off a building to save a possible suicide jumper. "I was on top of the Ritz-Carlton and there was a woman about to jump. We found out that she was an in-patient because her doctor called and told us that she did indeed have the potential to jump," says Loder. So what exactly did he do? "Well, since I had the rapelling harness in my hand I was nominated for the job," he remembers. "So I flew down the side of the building and, as she was being distracted, I knocked her in and then others came in and subdued her."

Of the traumatic scenes Edward Loder has witnessed one sticks in his mind. "Probably the toughest thing I've had to do in all my years as a firefighter was dragging bodies and body parts out of a plane crash at Logan Airport," the gravel-voiced firefighter says. "It was an experience I will never forget and one that few really understand.

"My son will ask me 'don't you think you're getting a little old for this job? You know there are stronger and younger guys who could do your job a little better,' but it's all I know and I'll stop when I think I'm ready," Loder says about his veteran status as a firefighter. While there may be stronger and younger guys waiting to take Loder's place, bets are they aren't as dedicated—and as tough—in the fullest sense of the word—as the man himself.

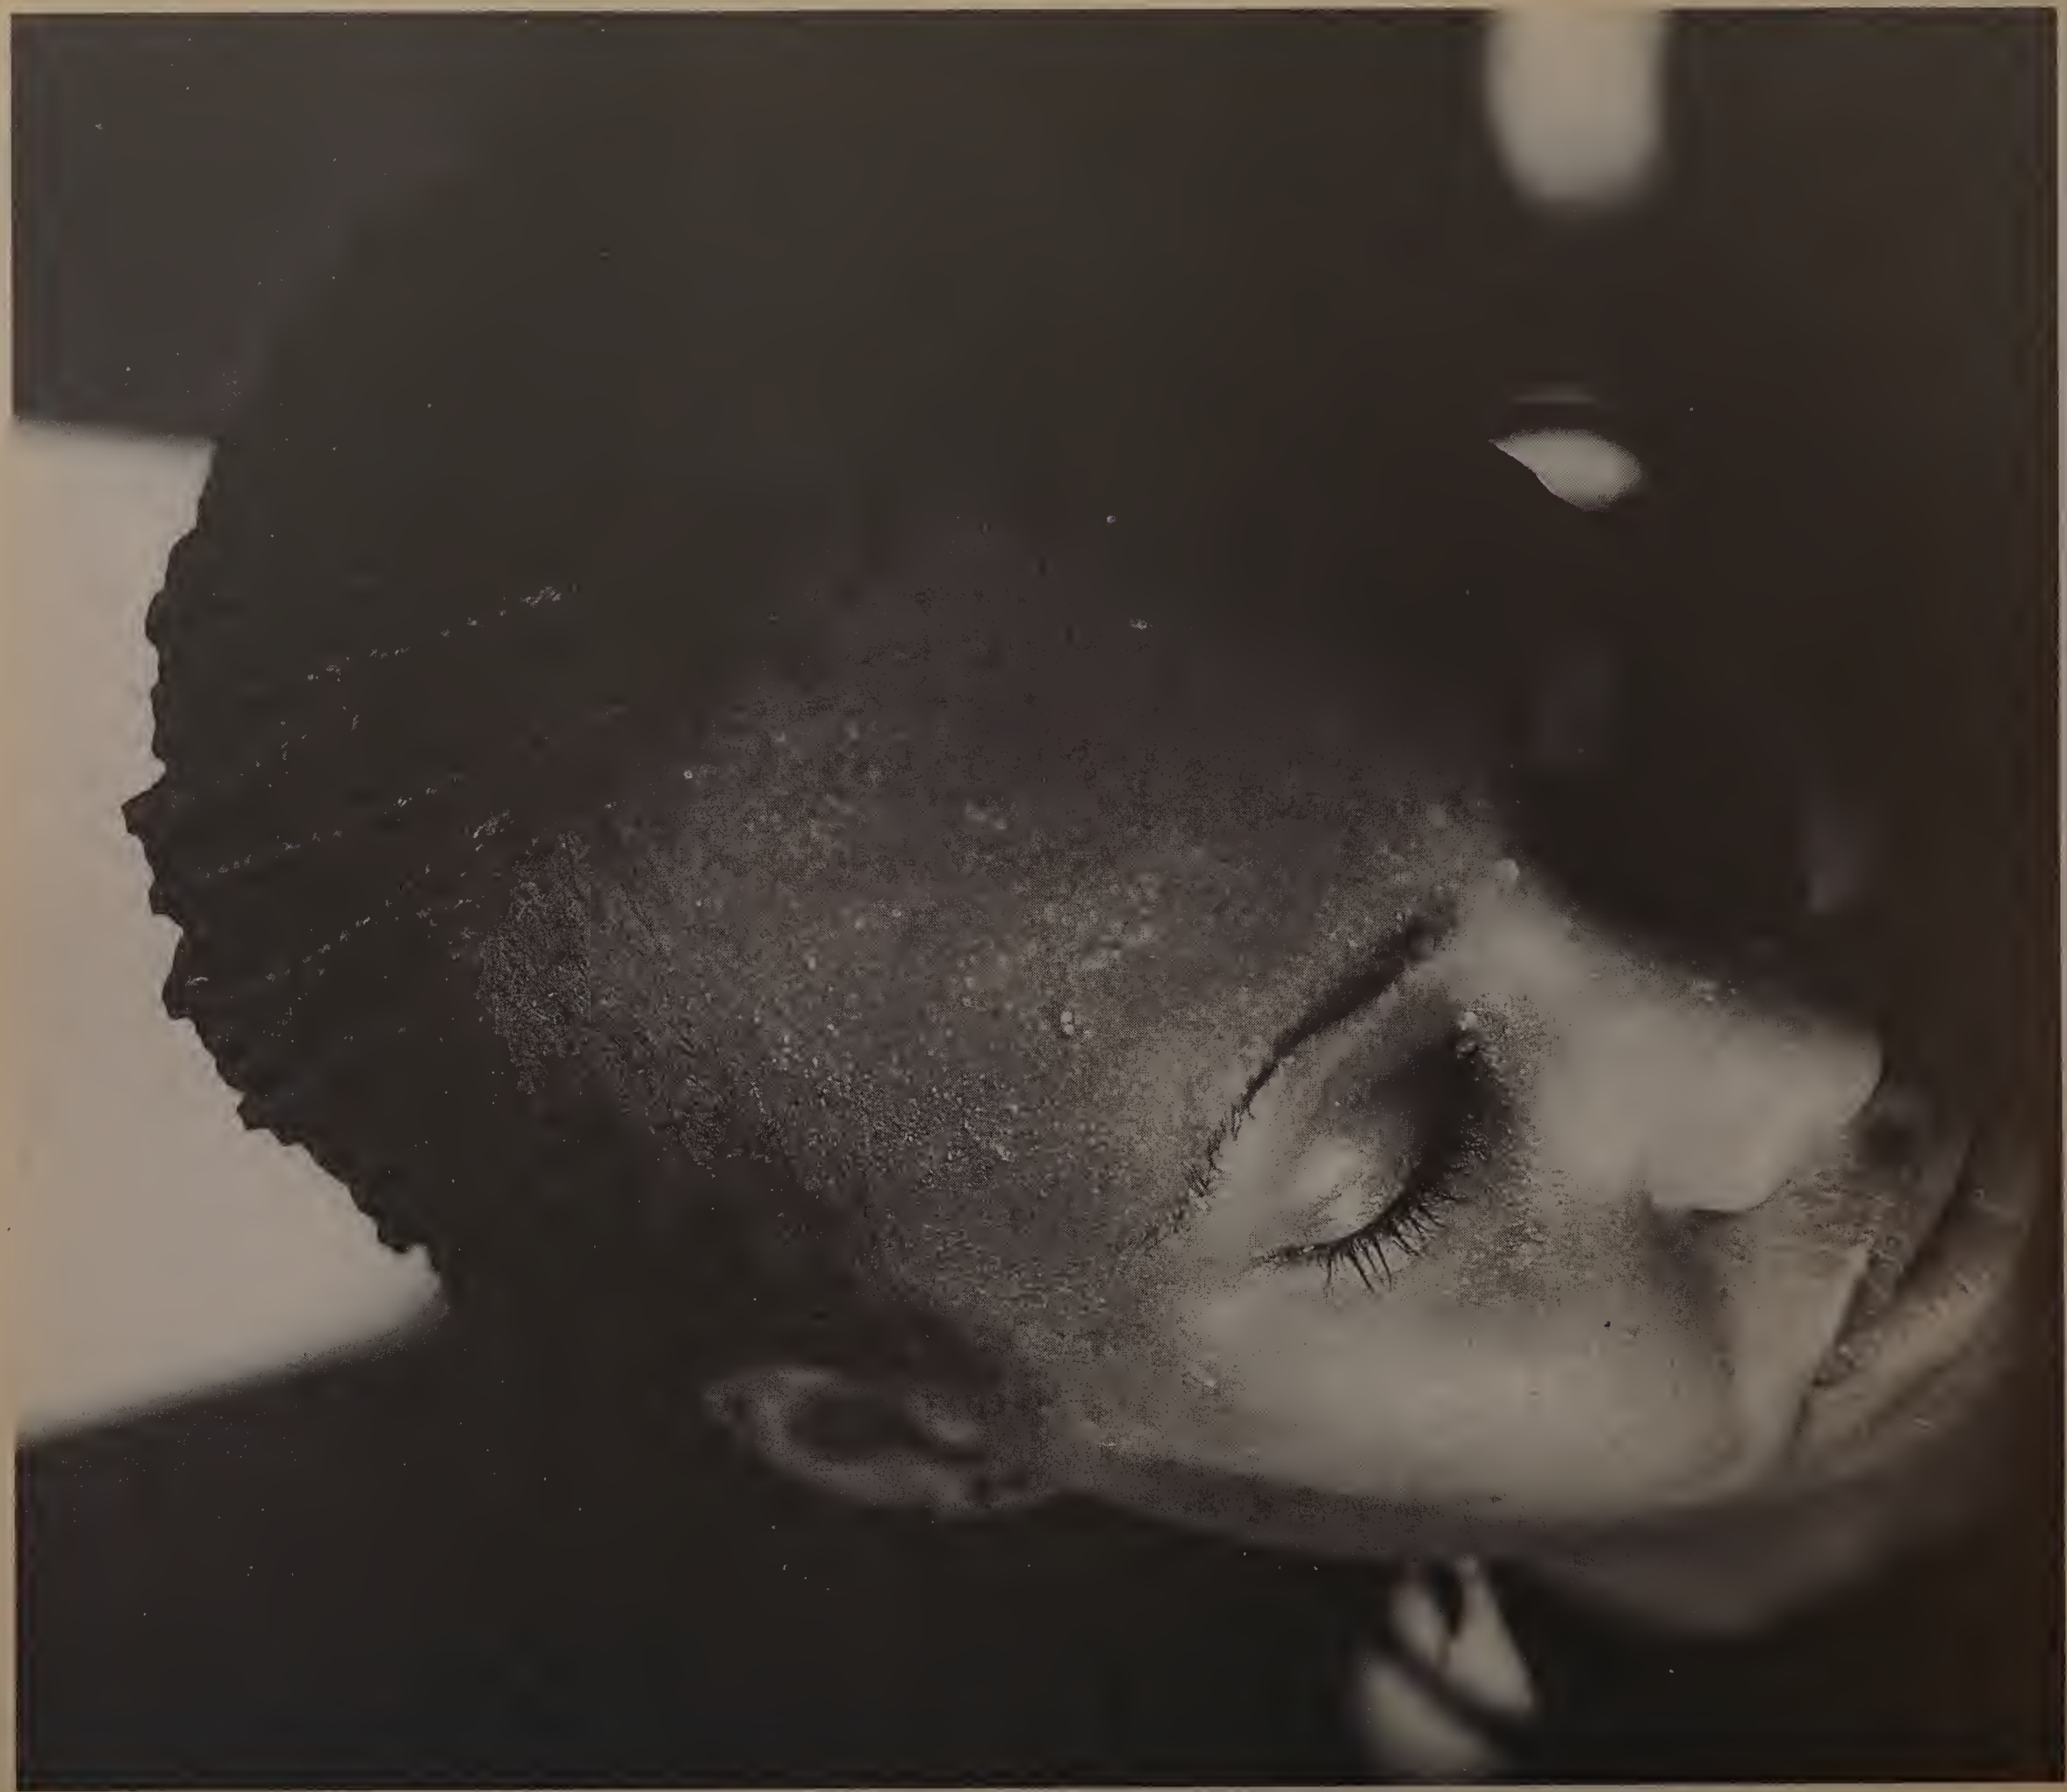
EDWARD LODER

CARLINE LEMOINE, Boxer

When I ring the doorbell at the Jamaica Plain home of this 26-year-old boxer I expect a gnarly, beat-up tough girl. Maybe she would even be missing some teeth and have that infamous boxing nose. What I get is something shockingly different. Carline Lemoine answered the door and was not only beautiful but was beautifully spoken—which is really no surprise since her idol is one of the smoothest talkers of all time, Muhammad Ali.

Lemoine says she got into boxing through a friend of hers who was boxing at the time. "I told this guy that I would like to be a boxer and he thought it was funny and said that I should just be a ring girl," Lemoine says. "I told him if I was going to be in the ring it would be as a boxer."

Eventually Lemoine connected with longtime boxing trainer "Papa" Ray Drayton and she and a girlfriend began serious training for fights.



The other girl eventually quit but Lemoine kept hanging around the gym. Chuckles Drayton, "They came in and said they wanted a good workout so I watched them go through a workout and Carline kept coming back but the other girl just disappeared."

Boxing is a good way to express her womanhood, Lemoine says. And these days kicking ass is just as good a way as any to do that. And the lightweight state champ's 6-1 record proves that fact. It was that same record that prevented her from fighting in the Golden Gloves championship in Lowell recently. "There's nobody experienced enough to fight her around here," says Drayton.

Although female boxing is growing in popularity and public, Lemoine, who works as an administrative assistant, says she still gets some flak from her old-fashioned family and certain male friends. "Some just don't think I should be a boxer," Lemoine says. They might want to think twice before reminding her about these opinions—for their own sake.

CARLINE LEMOINE

STEVE "TUNNEL RAT" SCIGLIANO, Boxer

Turning professional at 28 is not an easy pill to swallow for any athlete. For a boxer, 28 years old is near ancient, considering the fact that Iron Mike was a boxing icon at 20. But Steve Scigliano isn't really worried about it. When I ask him his professional record, not knowing that he's yet to fight, "Tunnel Rat" lets me know it will be 1-0 as of the next night. "The big fight," the laid-back heavyweight says in regard to his first pro bout.

Scigliano's amateur record was a hefty 13-0 before the move onward and upward.

The pugilist's predictions come true. Later on the next night, Scigliano's opponent throws in the towel in Round Four.

As far as toughness is concerned, Scigliano's status seems almost legendary. "He's one tough bastard," quips Jim Farrel Jr., of O'Mally's Gym in Quincy. A second later he continues, "You're not going to find too many as tough as Steve."

As far as the toughest thing Scigliano himself thinks he's ever done? "Winning the Golden Gloves in 1996," the brawler proudly says.

Also a worker on the tunnel project—hence the nickname if you're wondering—Scigliano is quick to point out that Big Digging is just as grueling and dangerous as boxing. Possibly even more. "I've seen guys get their fingers cut off by some of the machines we use," the boxer says. With the exception of the loss of an occasional ear, a lost appendage is something you'll never see in boxing.

ELAINE KWON, Tae Kwon Do Champion and Classical Pianist

Elaine Kwon looks frail and delicate in her bright green winter coat. She looks that way until she actually takes it off. Then her muscular pipes are bared and I realize she might be a little stronger physically then I had originally sized her up to be.

"People think I'm a delicate 'Asian flower,'" the model-thin Cambridge resident confides. "And that's what I like them to think I am until it's time to strike."

The 32-year-old quickly becomes one of the friendliest—and most fun—subjects that I meet in my quest to find the toughest Bostonians around.

We sit in the bar (a convenient interview spot for both of us) for a few hours and in our theoretical meanderings about all things under the sun—and between sips of suds—I realize that Kwon is also one of the most dedicated and passionate tough "guys" on this list. And not just about kicking-ass, as the second degree blackbelt and national Tae Kwon Do champion in forms has the ability to do. About more refined things like her music—after all Kwon has a doctorate in the musical arts, not an easy piece of paper to get. "My dad was a Tae Kwon Do master and I grew up watching him train. He wouldn't let me do it because I was a pianist but I always wanted to," says the classical pianist who spends a good deal of time performing throughout the United States as well as training—a combination that usually doesn't go hand in hand. "A lot of my peers think that I can't really be serious about my music if I'm into Tae Kwon Do and the martial arts," says Kwon—also a professor at Bridgewater State College. "But they both are ways to express myself." And with Kwon's ability to beat us senseless or tickle the ivory who are we to argue with that.

JOSEPH MCCAIN JR., Cop, Biker, Ex-Marine

Actually that would be Sergeant McCain to you. One of Somerville's finest for the last nine years, McCain's work, not pleasure, has gotten him "involved" with some of the rougher elements around the Boston area.

"Involved" meaning he's locked their asses up and stuffed them headfirst into his squad car. "I've been punched in the face. I've been attacked on some domestic calls but the toughest part of the job isn't the physical confrontations, it's the mentally depressing situations," McCain laments. "I go into homes sometimes, and for me to see a mother who is lying on the couch, smoking crack and drinking beers and there's a six-month-old baby in a crib that's soaked with piss and their ass is red with a rash because they haven't been changed in two days is the toughest part of this job."

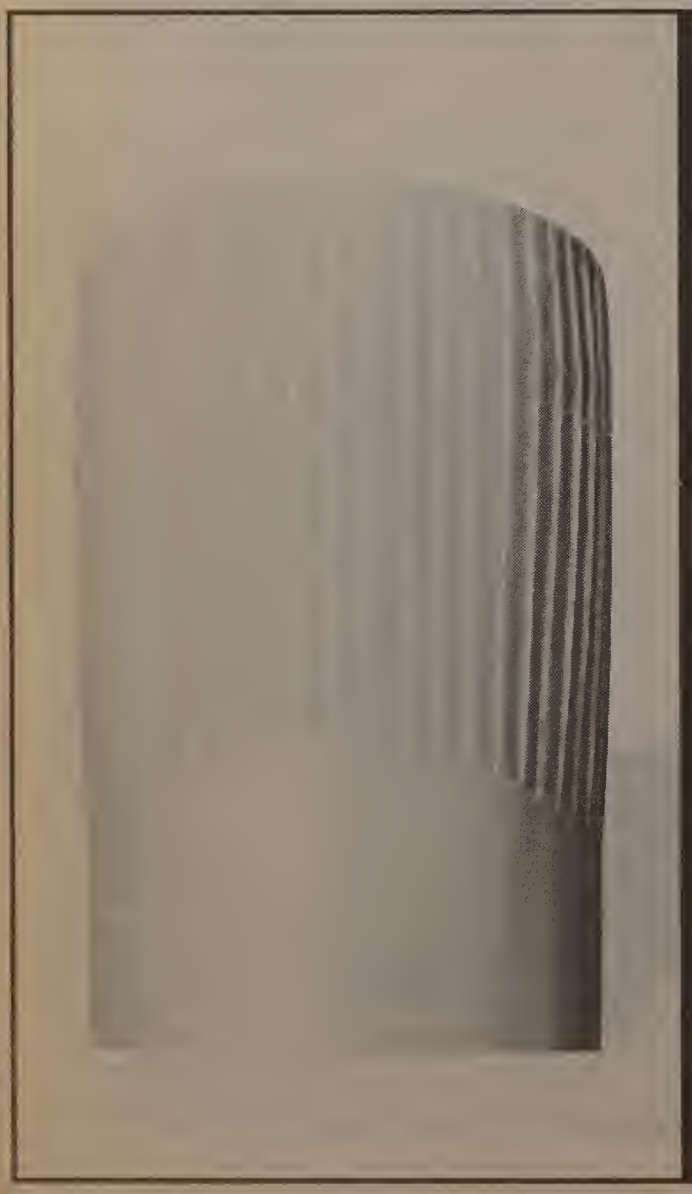
A tattoo enthusiast, McCain is also one of the founders of the Wild Pigs Boston—a group of cops who also happen to be bikers. "I've been on a bike since I was about seven. My father used take my little motorcycle and throw it in the trunk of his car and bring me up into the woods. He'd read the paper and I'd be zooming back and forth," the 5-foot-10, 200-pound cop remembers. Nowadays McCain rides something a little more hefty—a half-ton Harley.

Wise-off or break the law and the 35-year-old Sarge doesn't only have the ability to kick the hell out of you but he can go one better—he'll lock you up with a whole bunch of people who can probably do the same. And, as McCain says, "I haven't lost one yet and if need be I know I'm physically capable to react to anything anybody is going to throw at me out in the street."



MIKE O'MALLEY, Four-Time US National Tae Kwon Do Champion and Former Olympic Team Captain

When I first step into the J.H. Kim Tae Kwon Do Institute near Kenmore Square, Mike O'Malley quickly informs me that Tae Kwon Do is the only Olympic sanctioned martial art. He's worried, it seems, that people might consider him some sort of hack. He lets me know that the level he is on is virtually incomparable to any other.

And he's right.

"What I was a part of is something that is recognized internationally and it doesn't really go any higher than the Olympics," he says, choosing his words carefully. "There are a lot of systems out there but none on the level of Tae Kwon Do."

Now 40 years old, O'Malley started training as a teenager here in Boston with J.H. Kim, an internationally certified grand master and later on, O'Malley's Olympic coach. The full time instructor had become involved with Tae Kwon Do a short while after the death of his father, himself a professional boxer, as a way to build confidence and to deal with some of the tougher elements of his home neighborhood, Dorchester. O'Malley's potential was soon evident and he quickly became a protégé of Kim's. Explains O'Malley, "I was willing to dedicate six to eight hours a day training, and would actually sleep on the mats here and wake up kicking and punching. That was my life back then."

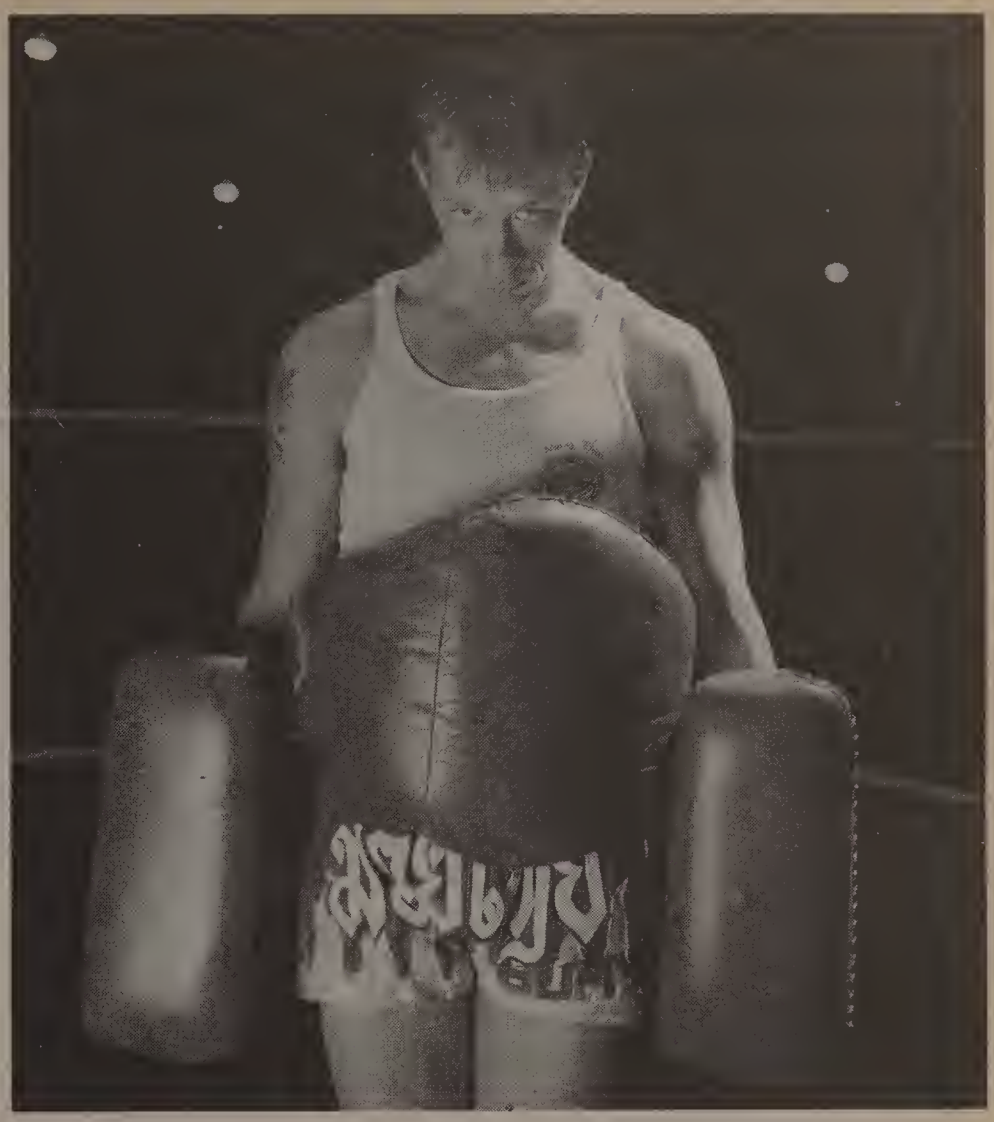
O'Malley has had his fair share of tough moments. He competed against the current bronze world medalist with a fractured foot. He went five years never losing a fight. He's even had some hairy incidents on the MBTA. "I was on the green line getting off at Kenmore Square. These two belligerent kids wouldn't let anybody off the train. After exchanging words one of them decided to rush me, fists in the air and eyes lit up. People were cheering and encouraging the altercation. I kicked him in the face with a roundhouse kick and he fell right to the ground like a lead weight. Afterwards you could've heard a pin drop," O'Malley says, chuckling at the punchline—no pun intended.



MARK MELTZER, Mauy-Thai Instructor, Adam Berke Gym

Mark Meltzer started learning some form of pugilism at age nine. After learning a handful of different disciplines, the 28-year-old former Boston Guardian Angel settled on Mauy-Thai kickboxing—which happens to be one of the toughest styles to learn and the most grueling and painful to master. "I got into this type of martial arts because a Mauy-Thai trainer from Scotland came in and wiped the floor with me. After that I thought if I was going to pursue martial arts it would be Mauy-Thai," explains the 5-foot-8, 150-pound mass of muscle.

And what exactly is Mauy-Thai?

In Mauy-Thai, as opposed to other forms of martial arts, you kick with your shins, elbows and knees and, of course, your dukes. "There are less rules in Mauy-Thai than other disciplines and you can fight from a clinch stance," Meltzer adds. Less rules indeed. Last year the ex-bouncer broke his leg and arm during a sparring session—and continued to train after that.

In a dark corner of the Adam Berke Gym the instructor steps into the training ring. A few of his students have been milling around for some time now, kicking the bags or just swiping practice swings at the air. "I've been coming to train with Mark for about a year and a half," says 23-year-old Brian Stewart, of Salem,"and if you're making a list of the toughest people in Boston, Mark belongs on it. The power he has in the ring is unbelievable and he's just a terrific fighter," he goes on to say about his teacher.

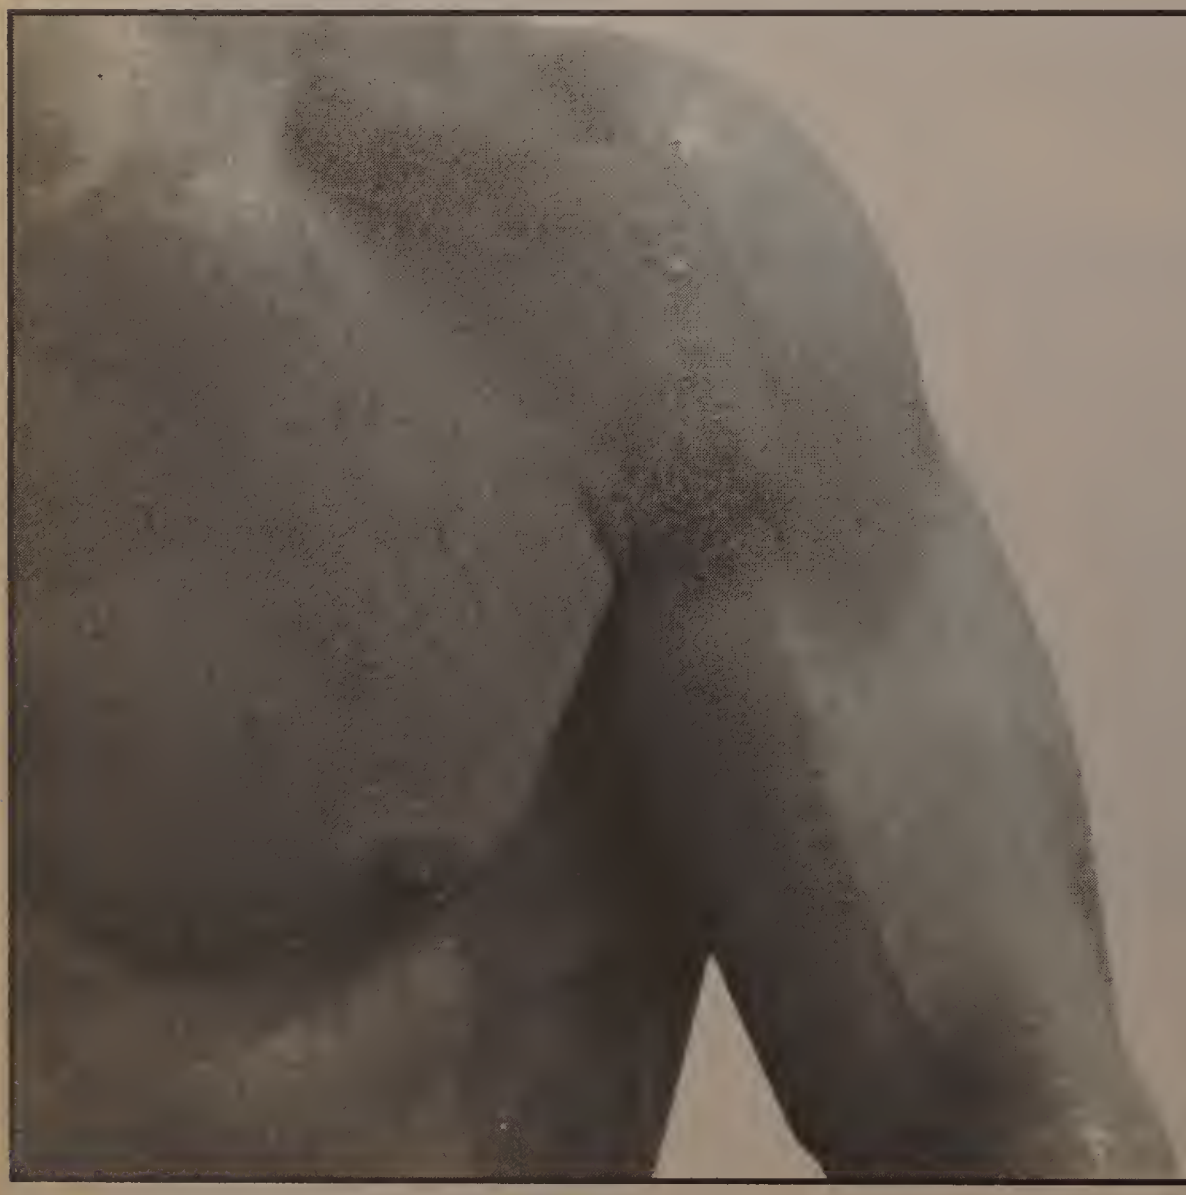
"The funny thing is when I started working at my day job there were three other guys who started around the same time and word got around that there was a martial arts expert in their midst. Well, everyone thought it was one of the bigger guys but it turned out to be me and everybody was shocked because of my size," offers Meltzer. I guess it's true what they say: Big things do come in small packages.

RAY BOURQUE, Boston Bruins Defenseman



With a minute and 13 seconds left in the first period the Bruins' captain shows his grit. He skates mad and furious toward the boards and cracks Pittsburgh Penguins star Jaromir Jagr like a Hummer rolling over a speed bump. Jagr goes down hard. Bourque gets penalized with a game misconduct—the first in a lengthy career.

For the last 19 seasons the 37-year-old Bruin has been one of this town's toughest people. The B's leading career goal scorer has also won the Norris Trophy for top defenseman five times.

He's been slashed, punched, kicked, slammed and stitched up. He's played bruised, broken and bloody. Of course he's also dished out his fair share of the pain himself. And all this time he's only missed 20 games as a result of injury. You do the math: more than 1,400 games played and only 20 games missed.

Spending this much time on the ice can lead to some of life's most grueling encounters. "I still think the toughest thing that I ever experienced is a triple-overtime game," Bourque tells me. "It was a pretty hard endurance test. Also, for me, it's playing at a certain level all the time—day in and day out—and being able to compete at this level for so long," he adds.

And what about off the ice? Although Bourque says he maintains his passivity when in his civvies—"Oh I'm usually just a pretty quiet guy and not so tough"—he might be suspect of fibbing. Whatever the case may be, no matter, because Watching Bourque on His Couch isn't a professional sport. At least not until he retires, anyway.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN, Boston's Toughest Man of All Time

John L. Sullivan was notorious for his awkward fashion sense. He would wear orange and yellow houndstooth suits, his pants held up by a $10,000 diamond-studded belt given to him by his Boston fans. If you dared mention his crazy sense of style or his daring dress code he would, most likely, break a bottle over the bridge of your nose and probably punctuate the move with a head-butt or a swift kick to the groin depending on his mood. Incidents like this would usually take place in a bar—where the bareknuckled brawler spent most of his time.

Born in Boston in 1858, Sullivan shined shoes outside the Ruggles T stop until the day that he received a casual invitation to box in a Boston theater. The 180-pound Sullivan knocked his opponent into the orchestra with his first blow. The first of many punches to be thrown in Sullivan's career.

For a year after that Sullivan gave boxing "exhibitions" and promised $25 to anyone who could last a single round.

Few ever did.

Subsequent engagements gave John L. the reputation of being strong enough to knock a horse down—something he proved on more than one occasion. In 1880, already infamous for his brute strength and his uncanny ability to act like a bastard when under the influence, the boxer issued a challenge "to fight any man breathing for any sum from $1,000 to $10,000," adding, "This challenge is especially directed to Paddy Ryan." Ryan was the American champ at the time and, come fight time, was steamrolled by Sullivan in the ninth round.

For the next 10 years this Boston strong boy dominated the prize ring and was one of the most popular figures in the country. More than once, his fights were stopped in order to save his opponent's life. And more than once he came within a hair's breadth of losing his life to the conquering forces of booze.

It's apropos that the last bareknuckled match in the country featured Sullivan in the ring against a younger Jake Kilrain in 1889. The match was outdoors in 106-degree heat and lasted a incomprehensible 75 rounds. At one point during the bout Kilrain offered to stop and take a draw but Sullivan declined, offering that "I don't just want to win. I want to kill him."

Like many a famous brawler, Sullivan died impoverished and virtually unknown—except as a legend. ✦

INSIDE Chinatown

BY IAN DONNIS

IN SUBTERRANEAN QUARTERS PACKED WITH LOTTERY TICKETS, dried mushrooms and Jackie Chan videos, a wizened Chinese woman haggles for herbs. The proprietor at Kokwa Herb and Books, on Tyler Street in the heart of Chinatown, drives a hard bargain. He strikes a deal, wraps the goods in brown paper to go. Nearby, strings of golden roast chickens, ducks and geese hang in the window of the Hong Kong Eatery at 79 Harrison. Sellers of the roast birds are subdued; no one, it seems, needs cajoling to be convinced of the merits of a crispy roast chicken.

The old ways continue undaunted in Chinatown, even as a surge of development unfolds in the neighborhood. Plans include a $250 million retail, housing and hotel complex for lower Washington Street, announced last year by New York-based Millennium Partners. Small compared to counterparts in New York and San Francisco, Boston's Chinatown has long been pushed and pulled by the fortunes of the surrounding downtown, theater district, New England Medical Center and the Combat Zone. Nonetheless, the neighborhood remains a vibrant and distinct subculture within the larger city, offering an Oriental panoply of pungent smells, sights and tastes.

Getting to Know You

Chinatown developed out of the same need for imported labor that led Chinese immigrants to work on the California gold rush of 1849 and construction of the transcontinental railroad in 1865. A few years after being brought by businessmen to North Adams in 1870 to break a strike at the Sampson Shoe Factory, a group of Chinese laborers migrated to Boston and pitched tents along narrow Ping-On Alley, near Essex and Oxford streets. Many of the newcomers found work reconstructing parts of the nearby downtown, including the central office of Bell Telephone, after the great fire of 1872.

Numerous immigrant groups moved through the 32-acre neighborhood created by filling the old South Cove mud flats in the 1830s, including Irish, Italians, Central European Jews, Syrians and Lebanese. By 1890, some 15 Chinese shops existed on Harrison Avenue and Oxford, and about 200 Chinese immigrants lived along Harrison, Beach, Essex and Ping-On Alley. Although still small, Chinatown was on its way to becoming one of the largest such neighborhoods in the United States.

Boston's Chinatown is now home to more than 4,300 people, mostly Chinese from China, Hong Kong and Taiwan, although increasing numbers of new residents, many Chinese, came from Laos, Vietnam, Cambodia and Thailand. More than 200 businesses extend from Chinatown onto lower Washington Street and the adjacent theater district, and some 40 agencies and organizations cater to the needs of the growing Asian-American community.

Despite Chinatown's growth, the neighborhood remains compact, gritty, accessible by public transportation and easy to navigate on foot. The greatest challenge is finding a parking spot. But the neighborhood's proximity to the theater district and waterfront offers hope for motorists in search of a berth. Entering Chinatown, one is quickly enveloped by the sound of Cantonese and the aroma of incense.

Cool sounds and funky smells have been peppered through the years by blasts from Asian gangs, fighting for lucrative turf and clout. Peace prevails these days, with the palpable criminal presence manifest only in the prostitutes and drug peddlers who linger around Chinatown's saltier edges. The most pulsepounding time of the year for the neighborhood is New Year, usually in late January, when celebrants march fire-breathing dragons through the streets, backed up by traditional musicians and the explosion of countless fireworks. Chinatown's second-biggest holiday is the August moon festival, when New Year's giddiness is repeated.

Bounded roughly by the Southeast Expressway, Essex Street, Washington Street and the New England Medical Center, Chinatown offers a number of points of entry. The most formal is the Chinatown Gateway, a traditional Chinese gate at the intersection of Beach and Hudson. Anchored by marble sculptures of four lions that signify strength and good luck, the landmark was given to the neighborhood by Taiwan in 1982. The heart of Chinatown is Beach Street and the narrow sidestrects like Tyler and Hudson, where restaurants, herb sellers, markets and shops proliferate.

Chinese cooking traces its roots to Confucianism and Taoism. Dating to China's classical age from 1122-249 B.C., Confucianism emphasized blending different ingredients for their appeal in taste, texture and appearance. Taoism, on the other hand, placed more importance on the life-giving capabilities of certain foods. As practiced in China, cooking is low-fat and low-caloric, with animal fats used sparingly, and cream, butter and cheese atypical ingredients. Once Americanized, Chinese cooking used richer ingredients and more chicken and beef. Though most Chinatown restaurants offer an array of dishes that straddle the old and new approaches, from braised chicken feet to the ubiquitous General Gau's chicken and the panoply in between. As a plus, many Chinatown restaurants remain open late in this early-to-bed town.

Soul on Spice

In Chinatown, the maxim often proves true that the more nondescript the setting, the better the food. Chau Chow Seafood Restaurant, 52 Beach St., opened in 1985, is the first of five restaurants of the Vietnamese Luu family. The original Chau Chow is by far the most modest looking of the lot, but the peapod stems in garlic and spicy dry fried salted squid are to die for.

Ho Yuen Ting Seafood, in the basement of 13A Hudson St., offers home-style cooking. Try the hot pots and soups, including hot and sour and eight-flavor winter melon.

Chinatown Cafe is where the neighborhood residents stop for takeout.

and near-ancient Asian graybeards share bright red communal tables in a funky atmosphere.

People's Cafeteria, 21-23 Edinboro St., offers vinyl-padded chairs and a glowing portrait of a waterfall, along with more than 120 dishes at $5.95, including squid with curry sauce, fried crab with ginger and scallions, and steamed fresh oysters with black bean sauce. Conveniently situated near the Southeast Expressway for fast take-away.

Chinatown Cafe, 230 Harrison St., is plunk in the heart of the residential Asian neighborhood, hard by the cleaners, pharmacy and insurance offices. Primarily take-out, the menu is vast, cheap and very authentic. You'll recognize the place by the ducks hanging in the window.

TRADITIONAL FARE

Carl's Pagoda, 23 Tyler St. (Cantonese fare, including steamed sea bass), China Pearl, 9 Tyler St., New Shanghai, 21 Hudson St. (good scallops in black pepper sauce), Dynasty, 33 Edinboro St. and Golden Palace, 14 Tyler St. (where you can pick your fish fresh from the tank).

SEAFOOD SPECIALTIES

Jumbo Seafood Restaurant, 5-7-9 Hudson St., Ocean Wealth, 8 Tyler St., Peach Farm (try the hot pot of braised oysters and roast pork), 4 Tyler St., East Ocean City, 25 Beach St., Chau Chow City, 83 Essex St., Grand Chau Chow, 41-45 Beach St.

DIM SUM

This is the pinpoint bounty of appetizers, served with tea at breakfast or lunch. Carts loaded with metal and bamboo steamers are wheeled around, as servers lift lids to allow for closer inspection. The selections, usually offered at $1.50 to $4 a pop, range from dumplings filled with shrimp, chicken or pork, to slices of savory scallion pie and steamed buns filled with a sweet red bean paste. Dim Sum is served daily, from morning to mid-afternoon, at a number of Chinatown restaurants, including China Pearl, Chau Chow City, Dynasty and, on the weekend, others.

OUT OF CHINA

As Chinatown expands into the withering Combat Zone, some of the slack is being taken up by Vietnamese newcomers, who have opened markets, jewelry stores and restaurants. The best of the latter include Pho Bolsa, One Stuart St., Pho Pasteur, 682 Washington St. and Dong Khanh, 81-83 Harrison Avenue. Try the inexpensive fresh salads, delicate spring rolls and brimming bowls of pho, the Vietnamese combination of soup, noodles and chicken or beef, garnished with bean sprouts, limes, chili and basil. Penang, 685 Washington St., embodies the mix of Indian, Thai, Indonesian and other influences that form the essence of Malaysian cooking. Try the soups, noodle dishes, barbequed stingray, beef simmered in spices and lemongrass, and bubur cha cha, a dessert of diced sweet potato and taro root served in warm coconut milk.

For vegetarians, Buddha's Delight, 5 Beach St., offers vegetarian mock meats such as barbequed tofu and vermicelli and tofu "chicken" with lemongrass, onions and coconut juice. Ginza Japanese Restaurant, 16 Hudson St., serves some of the best sushi in Boston.

SILKED STOCKERS

North End Fabrics, 31 Harrison, attracts home sewers and professional designers with silk, velvet, fake fur, upholstery and drapery materials, theatrical and bridal fabrics, imported lace, linen and odd remnants. The business stands as a reminder that textiles and garments were the main trade in Chinatown before being supplanted by restaurants and wholesale grocers.

GROCERS

The aisles at Vinh Khan Trading Co, 675 Washington St., are lush with ginseng green tea, icons of Buddha, Confucius and Jesus, dinner ware, fresh flowers and containers of Vietnamese chili garlic sauce, rice vinegar and straw mushrooms.

Cheng Kwong Seafood Market, 73-79 Essex St., displays an impressive and attractively priced selection of fresh produce, including bananas at 39 cents a pound, giant papayas, melons, as well as such other products as pure sesame oil, coconut milk, prepared Japanese wasabi in a tube ($2.79) and bins filled with crabs, shrimp ($5.25-$6.25 a pound) and a variety of fish.

Eastern Live Poultry at 48 Beach St., reflects the Asian custom of using super-fresh ingredients. The long-time business sells live chickens ($1.30 a pound), ducks, geese and rabbits, but the barnyard aroma and atmosphere—yes, they slaughter the little fellas on site—discourages Western customers.

SUPERMARKETS

88 Supermarket, 50 Herald St., Ming's, 1102 Washington St. and See Sun Co., 25 Harrison Avenue, offer packages of frozen Peking ravioli, spring rolls and other fixings for creating an Asian feast at home. As in other markets, the range of products extends from the practical to fermented and dried offerings that are typically too strong for Western tastes, although Asians jam the markets especially on Saturdays.

HERBS

Proponents tout the ability of Chinese herbs to tackle a variety of maladies, from fading eyesight, weakened sexual energy and undeveloped inner psychic vision. The best known, ginseng, is regarded as a powerful energy tonic with anti-stress capabilities. Chinese licorice is said to relieve coughing by moistening the lungs. Fructus lychii, typically brewed into tea, gets the call for those with a lagging libido. Chinatown is dotted with herb shops (for example, Nam Bok Hong and Sio Kam Lung, both on Harrison) but the proprietors typically speak little English. For those who are interested, bookstores and web sites are a good source of information about herbs.

BAKERIES

Enjoy a sweet conclusion to a Chinatown visit at a neighborhood bakery, such as Hing Shing Pastry, 67 Beach St.; Kam Lung Bakery & Restaurant, 77 Harrison; Mix Bakery, 36 Beach St. and the Eldo Tea House, 36 Harrison. At some of the bakeries, such as Kam Lung, Chinese children race in and out after buying snacks while neighborhood men linger over tea at the back of the restaurant. Bakery choices run from savory Chinese favorites such as roast pork puffs and chicken pie to pound cake, oversized walnut and almond cookies, and even miniature apple pies (usually 75 cents).

Sights

The Old Quincy School at 90 Tyler St., built in 1847, was the first American public school with graded classrooms and individual desks for students. Today, the building is home to the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association, an umbrella group of family groups and social agencies, founded more than 75 years ago to assist Chinese immigrants. A statue of Confucius greets visitors to the association's quarters, where US citizenship classes are offered for newcomers, and Cantonese and Mandarin language instruction help American-born children to retain their cultural roots.

At 685 Washington St., the changing face of Chinatown can be seen in the historic Hayden Building, where Penang has replaced a seedy lounge and Taiwanese-owned Liberty Bank & Trust offers the promise of capital to would-be entrepreneurs. The historic building was designed in 1875 by Henry Hobson Richardson, the architect of Trinity Church, and was damaged by fire during the Combat Zone's more virulent days. Constructed of rough-cut brownstone and trimmed in sandstone, the Romanesque Revival structure was handsomely rehabilitated by Historic Boston in 1995.

The Chinese Merchants Association Building, 20 Hudson St., features a giant pagoda on its top and bas-relief characters on its front that represent eight tenets of Taoism. More than a half-century ago, Dr. Sun Yat-Sen stayed nearby during a US tour to raise money for the Kuomintang's fight against China's last emperors of the Qing Dynasty. ✦

SOUTHIE GOES TO HOLLYWOOD

THE PLACE TO BE ON OSCAR NIGHT WAS the L Street Tavern in South Boston, home of Good Will Hunting fame. Jack and Susan Woods, L Street owners, hosted a black tie, invitation-only party to celebrate the block-buster nine Academy Award nominations for this hometown hit. Major sponsors of the festivities were THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN MAGAZINE, Coors/United Liquors, Capitol Records, WBCN, Tweeter, Dunkin Donuts and Volvo Village. An Oscar feast was prepared by Chris Bussell, executive chef of Hibernia Restaurant in downtown Boston.

Close to 300 celebrants attended, including L Street regulars, neighbors, friends and special guests such as Acting Gov. Cellucci and Mayor Menino. While space was tight in the 75-capacity bar, especially since almost every major Boston TV and radio station was there to cover the rooting section, those who could not make it inside enjoyed an outdoor tent, refreshments and wide screen TVs to see the Good Will boys go 2 for 9. Not bad.

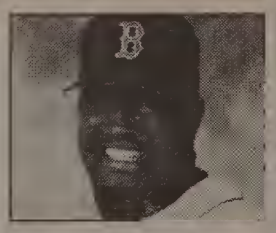
Improper choices for weeks of April 8 - April 21



Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday	Sunday	Monday	Tuesday
APRIL 8	APRIL 9	APRIL 10	APRIL 11	APRIL 12	APRIL 13	APRIL 14

Gimme Shelter
You might have a roof over your head—but not everybody does. In fact Boston has quite a few homeless bodies around these days. Why not try to help them out by trekking down to Avalon for the Beyond Shelter Event to Benefit the Homeless. Chefs from restaurants like Sonsie, Bob the Chef's and Chau Chow City will be serving delicious goodies so you won't go hungry like some of your Boston brothers and sisters.

When In Rome
Actually it's Venice. Stop by the Harvard Film Archives screening of 1971's Death In Venice directed by Luchino Visconti and based on Thomas Mann's novella. Strangely enough the plot is similar to the more recent Love & Death on Long Island—you won't see Jason Priestley in this one though.

Do You Want The Funk?
Because the mothership has landed at the Roxy at 7:30 pm with the Spring Funk Fest featuring the Vermont-based Belizbeha (see page 59), Chicago's Liquid Soul and NYC's Brooklyn Funk Essentials. Tickets are available at the Roxy Box Office, at all Ticketmaster locations or by calling 931-2000. The Roxy, 279 Tremont St.

MO*vin' On Up...
Let's hope this guy will help the Sox do the same. Steal some time and go see the Red Sox play (and we hope defeat) Seattle. Sure, the home opener was yesterday but you were at work and the tickets went like hotcakes—or better yet, hotdogs.

Hope all us Sox fans are this happy at the end of the season...in October.

Albatross!
Head over the Brattle Theater in Cambridge for the latest Monty Python installment, The Wind in the Willows. The most famous comedy troupe in Britain has adapted the story of Mole, Rat and Toad to some critical acclaim recently and is sure to leave you yearning to read the children's book again. Be warned though: This is not a movie for kids.

Mangia!
Tosca Restaurant in Hingham offers classes in Italian cuisine so you too can cook like an Italian mom. Today's class is the first of three and teaches participants the real way to make antipasti (you don't just slap some pepperoni and vegetables on a plate). The classes cost $60 each or $150 for all three. The next two classes are Prima (the first course) and Secondi and Contorni (the main course.) 14 North St., Hingham, 740-0080.

Are You Beat?
Well considering the fact that April is National Poetry Month being beat is a good thing. Tonight is a perfect opportunity for you to cruise over to Club Passim and cut your chops at the open-mic forum they have going for all poets, acoustic performers and storytellers. Or be sure and just listen. You dig? 47 Palmer Street, Harvard Square, Cambridge. 492-5300.

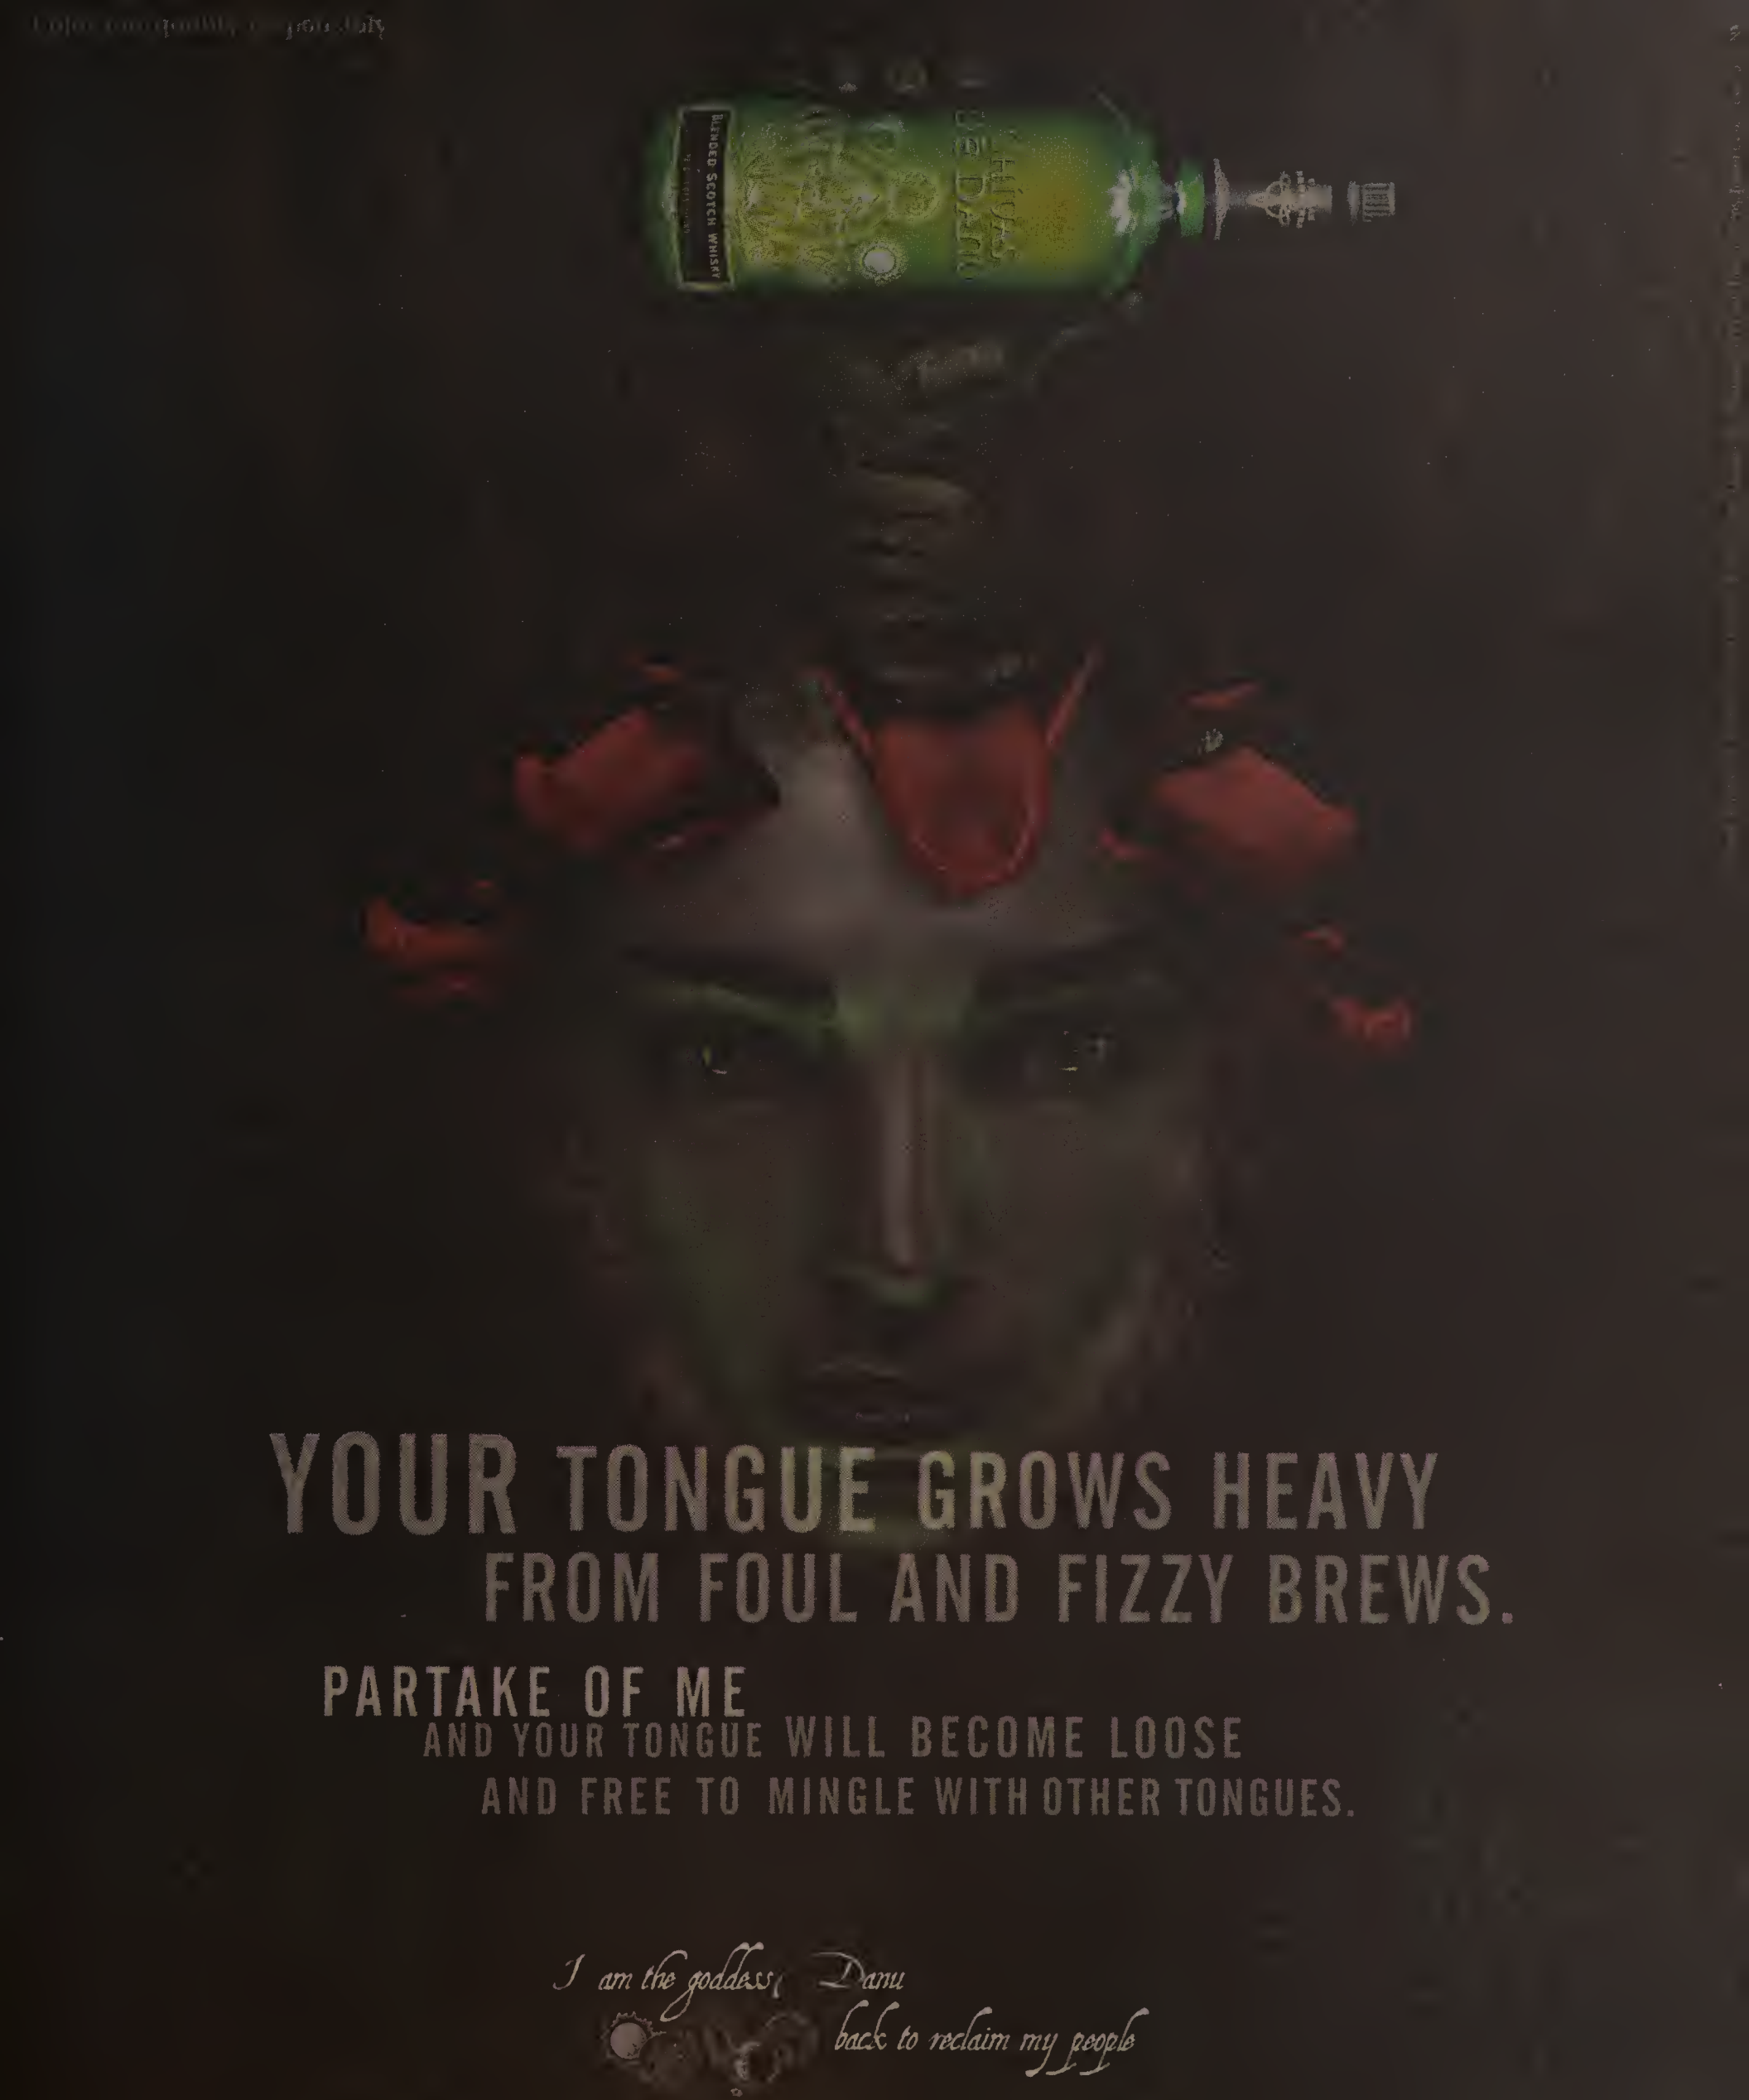
Flower Power
Garden in the Woods, New England's largest landscaped collection of wildflowers, opens today and what better a day to take a trip and marvel at the wonders of spring. From purple-hued irises to the crimson primroses this garden has just about every wildflower imaginable. 180 Hemenway Road, Framingham.

Pauly Shore

Da Wea...sel!
Last Chance to see crispy LA comedian, Pauly Shore—star of blockbuster (I'm joking here people) movie, Jury Duty. After launching his success with his own MTV show, Shore went to the big screen where his box office viability floundered. Now he's back where his talents always shine—on a stage in a comedy club. At 7 pm only at The Comedy Connection.

Dungeons & Dragons
And Bilbo Baggins in the Wheelock Family Theatre's version of the beloved J.R.R. Tolkien book, The Hobbit, which opens tonight at 7:30 pm. See Bilbo (played by William Dunn), Gandalf and a plethora of dwarves take on evil forces. Tickets are $10-$15. The Wheelock Family Theatre, 108 The Riverway. 734-4760.

Swingers
Not the swapping kind. The groovy, martini breed should mosey on down to the Good Life for a chance to be money baby! Hep cats are delighted by the soulful croonings of Darren Ames & His Big Little Band at 10 pm. The Good Life, 28 Kingston St.



What The Hell's A Flugelhorn?
Legendary flugelhornist Chuck Mangione plays tonight at Scullers Jazz Club. Don't miss the energetic musician play selections from some of his Grammy Award winning albums. After three decades—and then a three year hiatus—Mangione is still going strong. 400 Soldiers Field Road, Brighton.

Cut Along The Dotted Line
This "coupon" entitles the bearer to take the day off work (call in sick, fake a death in the family or tell your boss to go to hell) get really drunk, and encourage (or just plain scream at) the sweaty runner in the big race. Hand this to your boss tomorrow and he/she might just think it over before firing your ass—after all, it is Patriot's Day too, and no better way to celebrate our forefathers then to raise a glass in their honor.

Smoking Pot
Well actually baking pot. No, not that either. It's called firing, and it's a process that's used in making your own pottery—like bowls—and at Brookline's Clayroom, a "paint your own pottery studio" they let (and teach) you to throw your own work, which means shaping and forming it, and then fire and paint it. It's a blast and who knows—that bowl might come in handy one day. 1408 Beacon Street, Brookline. 566-7575

GEORGE WASHINGTON was well-known for his crossing of the Delaware. And upon one occasion, our threshold.

IT HAPPENED DURING THE AUTUMN OF 1789, while President Washington was visiting Boston. He called upon an old friend, Major Benjamin Frothingham, who lived in Charlestown. Later, the two stopped by Warren Tavern for drinks, making Washington one of our most famous patrons. Why not stop by yourself? And if you happen to know the President, by all means bring him along.

"A carnivore's dream...
Boston's Best New Steakhouse."
—The Improper Bostonian Magazine

"Plaza III is Gourmet Greatness."
—The Phantom Gourmet

"The focus is on the quality of the steak, flown in daily...from their own meat company. Memories are made of beef like this, the savory notes hitting high in the palate, filling the mouth with texture and aroma."
—Alison Arnett, The Boston Globe

"A touch of class has come to Faneuil Hall Marketplace with the arrival of Plaza III...first class restaurants are hard to find here, especially a topnotch steak house."
—Gus Saunders, The Boston Herald 1/2

Where's The Beef?

The only meat you'll find is in the content of the Bread and Puppet Theater's The City-of-Brotherly-Love Passion Play at Northeastern University for one night only on Friday, April 10. The Breadheads have a rich history in theater going back to New York's Lower East Side more than 30 years ago when German-born sculptor Peter Schumann started the troupe. The play is based on the real life events of the MOVE organization in Phily—who in 1985 were fired upon by police resulting in the death of six adults and five children. Tickets to the play are $10 and are available through the Northeastern University Ticket Center at 373-2247. Blackman Auditorium, 360 Huntington Ave.

It's All happening At The Zoo

The Franklin Park Zoo—yup we have a zoo in Boston—is bringing the Australian Outback to Beantown. In April the Australian Outback Trail exhibit opens and guess what? No lousy fences so you can actually pet that cute wallaby, emu or cockatoo that you've been dying to. Just make sure you wash your hands after. The exhibit takes up more than three acres of grassy, tree-lined knolls. For more information call 541-LION.

Your mom just handed you her 87-person guest list for your 50-person wedding.

Porn Again

To say B.C. Kagan (pictured on left) wanted to make a movie about the porn industry would be wrong. No, the Boston resident wanted to make a movie—a documentary to be exact—that addresses issues of sexuality, identity and erotic representation. And whom better to focus on than legendary porn super-stud Randy West (on right). Kagan's work is still in progress but you can catch some of her work-in-progress at Curious Liquids on April 17 at 8 and 10 pm. Tickets are $20 and go to helping the filmmaker finish her film. 22 Beacon Street.

★★★1/2
There's been a buzz on the film festival circuit and in the cult press about Japan's multi-media star Takeshi Kitano. The actor-writer-director's seventh film is his first to be released in the U.S. His self-styled hard-boiled personal here serves an unexpectedly moving story of risk and self-discovery. Two cops's lives diverge after one is shot and paralyzed in the line of duty. Wheelchair-bound Horibe (Ren Osuge), abandoned by his family, pulls himself out of despair by creating fantastical paintings (painted by Kitano). The guilt-ridden Nishi (Kitano), whose wife has a terminal disease, leaves the force and embarks on a lunatic caper. With dark humor and a meticulous attention to visuals and to jolting editing touches, Kitano builds a bridge between the sophisticated samurai movies of the 1960s and the modern shoot-'em-up. Kitano's film is far more oblique and austere than those of John Woo (it's more like Jean-Pierre Melville's), but both men put heart into an often glib genre.

Gheorghe Muresan plays a gentle giant in the aptly titled My Giant.

The Jew in the Lotus
★★★1/2
Writer Rodger Kamenetz, self-described neurotic (he could be played by Richard Lewis), found peace of mind and a greater sense of his Jewish identity when he accompanied a group of rabbis to India for a spiritual summit with the Dalai Lama. The story of Kamenetz's transformation, and the Jewish-Buddhist connection, comes to vibrant life in Laurel Chiten's documentary. Like her Twitch and Shout, about people with Tourette Syndrome, this film is incredibly inspirational without being sentimental. It plays at the Museum of Fine Arts on April 9, 11, 16-18, 30 and May 7, 9, 14.

Love and Death on Long Island
John Hurt is supremely enjoyable as Giles De'Ath, tweedy English intellectual, who improbably becomes the smitten stalker of an American teen idol played by Jason Priestley. At its best, Richard Kwietniowski's film is an equal opportunity lampooner, making fun of Giles's helplessness when it comes to modern technology, and presenting killer pastiches of the dopey B-movies in which Priestley's Ronnie appears (Hotpants College 2 is the one that Giles discovers by accident). The movie poops out in its final passages, but it's a mostly delicious piece of work, with 90210's Priestley admirably poised in his self-reflexive role.

The Mother and the Whore
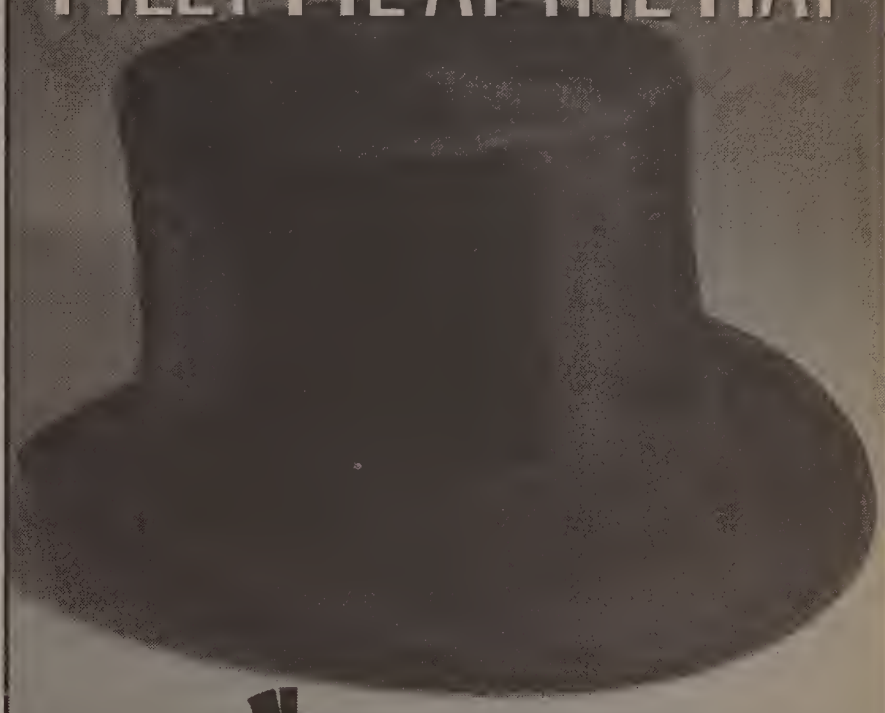
Catch the revival of this 1973 film, one of the peaks of French cinema. In it, director Jean Eustache examines the embers of the '60s political and cultural infernos through the sex life of a cute but self-absorbed Parisian slacker played by Jean-Pierre Leaud. Bernadette Lafont is the domestic-oriented woman with whom he lives, Francoise Lebrun the uninhibited nurse with whom he has sex on the side. The inevitable threesome does not play out according to Leaud's fantasy. The film is a coolly unsentimental, near-documentary look at intimate behavior that feels revolutionary in its honesty. It plays at the Brattle Theatre on April 10 and 11.



My Giant
Big newcomer Gheorghe Muresan (an NBA center) gives a wonderfully unaffected performance in this comedy about a showbiz agent who discovers a sheltered 7'7" man in Romania and wants to take him to Hollywood to play a villain in action movies. Unaffected is not the word for Billy Crystal, the movie's star, producer and co-writer. As in the other movies where Crystal has played a part behind the camera, there's a stifling, overplotted quality to the film. Also, a fundamental hypocrisy, because even as the story charts agent Sammy's journey from giant Max's exploiter to Max's unselfish protector (the medical condition that made Max a giant will cause an early death), it becomes all about putting Sammy/Crystal over as a lovable mensch. Crystal's brew of insecurity and ego proves deadly to the film, although My Giant's first half-hour is quite magical. Director Michael Lehmann is far from his black comedy days of yore (Heathers), but he does very nice work with Muresan. Speaking of giant egos, Steven Seagal makes a cameo.

Wild Things
Actress Denise Richards could be the closest thing we have to Marilyn Monroe—or Jessica Rabbit. I've seen her in substantial roles in two movies (this and Starship Troopers) and still have no idea whether or not she can act. But she is a mesmerizing collection of body parts—abundant clay for libido-centric directors. And the movie? It's one of those new film noirs, like Bound, that announce way too loudly they're about the subvert the genre, and then utterly crumble from lack of craftsmanship. Because I'm so damn mad the trailer gave away the results of the trial that the first half of the movie culminates in, I'm loathe to talk about the plot. In a Florida seaside city, Matt Dillon is the hunky guidance counselor, Richards the horny rich girl, Neve Campbell the punkish/bookish poor girl, Kevin Bacon a cop. Director John McNaughton at first goes for an overt tongue-in-cheek tone (reminiscent of Paul Bartel's Scenes from the Class Struggle in Beverly Hills). Funny stuff for a while (Bill Murray contributes, as a low-rent lawyer), but ultimately superficial and forgettable.

Kevin Bacon checks out starlet Denise Richards' wares in Wild Things.

Toast of the Town

More than 50 of the city's best chef's will gather on April 23 at the Black Falcon Cruise Terminal and participate in the 11th Annual Taste of the Nation to benefit Share Our Strength, the nations leading anti-hunger organization. Participants will be able to peruse culinary delights by such restaurants as; Clio, Zinc and Olives. Call 1-800-955-TOAST for more information.

Surf and Turf

It's spring. And how would you know it? By seeing surf & turf specials pop across menus everywhere. At Turner Fisheries in Back Bay for instance chef David Filippetti's new spring menu offers enticing Fried Oysters with Beef Tabasco Spring Rolls, Grilled Filet of Beef with Scallops and the classic Filet of Beef and Lobster.

Snacks

Tanjore in Cambridge is the first restaurant in Boston to serve "nashtas," which means snacks. Served between meals or late-nite in India, the personal-sized portions can also be made into a meal just as you would at a Chinese dim sum. Some of the nashtas treats include Ragda Pettis (potato patties on a bed of white peas topped with tamarind), Dahi Bhalla (lentil dumplings with yogurt) and Reshmi Kabobs (a "pate" of chicken and herbs wrapped around a skewer and charcoal-grilled). Prices range from $4-8.

Tea and Tunes

Afternoon tea at the Bristol Lounge of the Four Seasons Hotel will get a little livelier this winter with the addition of the Harvard Krokodiles. Slug back tea (blow first) to the tunes of Harvard University's oldest a cappella singing group the first Saturday of every month from January through May and September through December from 3:30-4 pm.

Theater Food

To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

You are the love of my life. I have never been this certain about anything like this. If love for you were people, I'd be China. I long to spend the rest of my life with you, I only pray you feel the same way. Not a day has gone by in our time together when I wonder how a loser like me got so lucky to have a woman like you. I'm sorry if I'm selfish sometimes—I guess that's the little kid in me. Thanks for putting up with me.

SUSAN'S FRIEND

GRAND CANAL
I met you, Christian, at the Grand Canal bar in Boston on Friday, March 13th. I met you at the downstairs bar with your roommate Ron. You asked me out a couple of times, and because my friends kept distracting me, I never got a chance to give you my answer. Then your roommate Ron wanted to leave, and you asked if I would leave with you guys. I told you that I couldn't because I was giving one of my friends a ride home. You then went to the men's room and I felt uncomfortable with Ron because he wanted to leave so badly, so I left and joined my friends on the dance floor. I never said good-bye to you. Twenty minutes later, Ron came to me on the dance floor asking me if I had seen you. I thought the two of you had left. Obviously, I hadn't seen you and told Ron just that. I would have looked for you, but I was afraid that you met someone else. Anyway, I wanted to tell you that I'm sorry that I never gave you my answer. I would love to go out with you. I hope you will read this and turn my Friday the 13th bad luck around. If so, respond to this column and suggest a way to meet.

RE: "My Favorite Vinny"
You are not alone, our dear "Friend" Vinny has seemed to have borrowed from more than you could Imagine. Returning phone calls is a "No-No" once he has befriended you with "cash-in-the-hand". Coincidence your letter has reached me? I think not (I hope to share stories with you). I also trusted him, he was a good friend...NOT!!
Vinny, you can run, but you can't hide (in LA or anywhere). It would be sad to hear our dear Vinny go "Badda Bing Badda Boom," but as long as he is still conning people then, "No One Is Safe." I would be VERY interested in a reply.

E
I wish things could've turned out different. It makes me sad to realize that you don't think of me as the man. Who else would push your car out of a snowbank with a smile just because he's with you? Who else would be happy to drive around the block a billion times while you replace your broken belt—content knowing that you'd eventually get back in? Who else will be able to match your wit and sarcasm? They broke the mold when they made me...but only because they couldn't flood society with freakish, passionate, funny, sensitive, romantic writers running around this crazy world—who would work in the sweatshops and middle-management hell-holes all day?

Surely it came as no surprise that love was too hot to handle. I really blew my cool and you, you just blew out the candle. I don't want to be remembered for that horrible night in Marshfield. Please let me know that I am forgiven. I miss you and may fixed stars govern our lives to be reunited.
LOVE FROM TIM

To the girl in the little black dress
It was Saturday, March 28. You and a friend were at the Washington Square stop on the Green "C" line. She had black hip-hugger pants and, what else, I don't know. I was only looking at you—with your dark hair and sultry looks. I was standing right next to you at the stop wearing a shiny jacket and khaki pants and got off at the Hynes Convention stop. I saw you again at the Starbucks on Beacon Street right near that same stop on Monday evening that week. I wanted to stop but just couldn't. Curious? Get in touch with me through here.

Aldara™ (IMIQUIMOD) Cream, 5%

Brief Summary—Consult package insert for full prescribing information.

DESCRIPTION
Aldara™ is the brand name for imiquimod which is an immune response modifier. Each gram of the 5% cream contains 50 mg of imiquimod in an off-white oil-in-water vanishing cream base.

INDICATIONS AND USAGE
Aldara 5% cream is indicated for the treatment of external genital and perianal warts/condyloma acuminata in adults.

CONTRAINDICATIONS
None known

WARNINGS
Aldara cream has not been evaluated for the treatment of urethral, intra-vaginal, cervical, rectal, or intra-anal human papilloma viral disease and is not recommended for these conditions.

PRECAUTIONS
General
Local skin reactions such as erythema, erosion, excoriation/flaking, and edema are common. Should severe local skin reaction occur, the cream should be removed by washing the treatment area with mild soap and water. Treatment with Aldara cream can be resumed after the skin reaction has subsided. There is no clinical experience with Aldara cream therapy immediately following the treatment of genital/perianal warts with other cutaneously applied drugs; therefore, Aldara cream administration is not recommended until genital/perianal tissue is healed from any previous drug or surgical treatment. Aldara bas the potential to exacerbate inflammatory conditions of the skin.

Information for Patients
Patients using Aldara 5% cream should receive the following information and instructions: The effect of Aldara 5% cream on the transmission of genital/perianal warts is unknown. Aldara 5% cream may weaken condoms and vaginal diaphragms. Therefore, concurrent use is not recommended.

1. This medication is to be used as directed by a physician. It is for external use only. Eye contact should be avoided.
2. The treatment area should not be bandaged or otherwise covered or wrapped as to be occlusive.
3. Sexual (genital, anal, oral) contact should be avoided while the cream is on the skin.
4. It is recommended that 6-10 hours following Aldara 5% cream application the treatment area be washed with mild soap and water.
5. It is common for patients to experience local skin reactions such as erythema, erosion, excoriation/flaking, and edema at the site of application or surrounding areas. Most skin reactions are mild to moderate. Severe skin reactions can occur and should be reported promptly to the prescribing physician.
6. Uncircumcised males treating warts under the foreskin should retract the foreskin and clean the area daily.
7. Patients should be aware that new warts may develop during therapy, as Aldara is not a cure.

Carcinogenicity, Mutagenesis, and Impairment of Fertility
Rodent carcinogenicity data are not available. Imiquimod was without effect in a series of eight different mutagenicity assays including Ames, mouse lymphoma, CHO chromosome aberration, human lymphocyte chromosome aberration, SHE cell transformation, rat and hamster bone marrow cytogenetics, and mouse dominant lethal test. Daily oral administration of imiquimod to rats, at doses up to 8 times the recommended human dose on a mg/m^2 basis throughout mating, gestation, parturition and lactation, demonstrated no impairment of reproduction.

Pregnancy
Pregnancy Category B: There are no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Imiquimod was not found to be teratogenic in rat or rabbit teratology studies. In rats at a high maternally toxic dose (28 times human dose on a mg/m^2 basis), reduced pup weights and delayed ossification were observed. In developmental studies with offspring of pregnant rats treated with imiquimod (8 times human dose), no adverse effects were demonstrated.

Nursing Mothers
It is not known whether topically applied imiquimod is excreted in breast milk.

Pediatric Use
Safety and efficacy in patients below the age of 18 years have not been established.

ADVERSE REACTIONS
In controlled clinical trials, the most frequently reported adverse reactions were those of local skin and application site reactions; some patients also reported systemic reactions. These reactions were usually mild to moderate in intensity; however, severe reactions were reported with 3X/week application. These reactions were more frequent and more intense with daily application than with 3X/week application. Overall, in the 3X/week application clinical studies, 1.2% (4/327) of the patients discontinued due to local skin/application site reactions. The incidence and severity of local skin reactions during controlled clinical trials are shown in the following table.

Remote site skin reactions were also reported in female and male patients treated 3X/week with imiquimod 5% cream. The severe remote site skin reactions reported for females were erythema (3%), ulceration (2%), and edema (1%); and for males, erosion (2%), and erythema, edema, induration, and excoriation/flaking (each 1%).

Adverse events judged to be probably or possibly related to Aldara reported by more than 5% of patients are listed below; also included are soreness, influenza-like symptoms and myalgia.

Incidences reported without regard to causality with Aldara.*

Adverse events judged to be possibly or probably related to Aldara and reported by more than 1% of patients include: Application Site Disorders: Wart Site Reactions (burning, hypopigmentation, irritation, itching, pain, rash, sensitivity, soreness, stinging, tenderness); Remote Site Reactions (bleeding, burning, itching, pain, tenderness, tinea cruris); Body as a Whole: fatigue, fever, influenza-like symptoms; Central and Peripheral Nervous System Disorders: headache; Gastro-Intestinal System Disorders: diarrhea; Musculo-Skeletal System Disorders: myalgia.

OVERDOSAGE
Overdosage of Aldara 5% cream is unlikely due to minimal percutaneous absorption. However, persistent topical overdosing of Aldara 5% cream could result in severe local skin reactions. Hypotension was reported following multiple oral doses of >200 mg of imiquimod and was resolved following oral or intravenous fluid administration.

DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION
Aldara cream is to be applied 3 times per week, prior to normal sleeping hours, and left on the skin for 6-10 hours.

HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

APRIL 8 - APRIL 21, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

You're pulling them in by the fistloads. Are you sure you want to be the hub so many folks are revolving around? This might turn out to be one of those "all things bright and beautiful" holidays that end in something that's dead serious. Parenting skills may be necessary if you're to work you're way through the event and heavy-duty emotions that may occur after the sun meets strict Saturn in your sign on Monday. The reputation you've achieved, the responsibilities you've assumed since Saturn entered Aries last April are under scrutiny, so stand tall.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Behind the scenes is where the action is, so go to confession, visit a sick friend, call your reclusive godfather and wish him a happy holiday. On Easter Mars enters your sign for six weeks of heightened physical activity; if you're thinking "swimsuit issue," this is the time to get in shape. Monday is tough on everyone, but because your Venus ruler is challenged by secretive, underhanded Pluto, you could make matters worse. Don't let anyone see your jealous streak.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

A flash of insight, a bolt from the blue early Easter morning when your Mercury ruler aligns with innovative Uranus. While this is not a traditionally spiritual aspect, it is highly intuitive, so if you listen to whatever you're telling yourself, you'll be the hunter with the most Easter eggs, among other things. A crusade, e.g., a tax revolt, may seem particularly appealing around April 15, but don't deceive yourself into thinking that group support will clarify what will remain an iffy, Neptunian money matter for a while.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

This is the first of three spiritually enlightening full moons, so moon children should take supreme advantage of the higher vibes being beamed at you this weekend. Because the Aries-Libra axis falls across your nadir and mid-heaven—home and career, mom and dad—you could become more involved with these potent forces than you are today. Perhaps too much parental responsibility, too many government restrictions, too demanding a boss, but not until the work week has started and the chocolate bunny is gone.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

It happens every year, but this week as the sun and prudent Saturn conjunct, the extra responsibilities being sent your way will do you some good, adding stability to your scene and stature to your reputation. Attending to family business, getting in touch with a teacher or mentor, redirecting a long-term goal are all beneficial acts to undertake during Aries. Next April, when the conjunction occurs in early Taurus, you'll be more severly challenged. What sort of diversion have you planned for the weekend? Forget it.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

This full moon is your money moon, so why not direct your hopes and wishes toward greater prosperity, to having more eggs in your basket? You probably won't see anything of substance coming in until your Mercury ruler goes direct on the 20th, but that's not so far off. Meanwhile, count on Venus and Jupiter, the two "benefics" of the solar system, being generous and loving to your partners and co-workers, and by reflection, to you, too. Of course, you have to stay on good terms and avoid throwing a jealous fit on Monday night.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

There's an up-side to having Saturn sitting in your Aries house of partners, and that should be evident after the sun sheds light on your situation during their conjunction. Around Monday, something significant gets resolved, one phase of a partnership matter may be finished and another begun. Mark the transition, because you've put up with a lot to get to this point. The Libra full moon this weekend makes you more vulnerable to moods and moon children; don't let one of them manipulate you into doing what you'd rather not.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Health professionals, craftsmen and service personnel go to the head of the class while the sun and Saturn bestow prominence in the work area. If your progress has been blocked due to regulations or limitations, you may make headway—literally and figuratively move mountains—after this potent planetary conjunction. But when it comes to romance, take another look at what is motivating you. A tense square between your often obsessive Pluto co-ruler and affectionate Venus can mess up a sweet deal you have at home.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

A very social Libra full moon this weekend surrounds you with different groups of people, some of whom you're comfortable with and some who are as stiff as a board. Flit, if you must, from one gathering to another, but don't blame an innocent neighbor or an additional guest if you crack under pressure. Too much is expected of you because your generous Jupiter ruler is running your kitchen, fueling the festive spirit. Parents, teachers, athletes and entertainers could have structure and strictness thrust on them when the sun and Saturn meet in your house of children and pleasures on Monday.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Satisfaction guaranteed after the sun joins your Saturn ruler early Monday. (Maybe I'm overly-optimistic, but that's the Sagittarius shtick.) A family or real estate matter can be resolved while the powerfully creative force of the sun aids and abets your prudent ruling planet, and your decision making process. You'll feel great and, despite the heightened sensitivity of this full moon, practically impervious to the not-so-subtle machinations a friend has in mind. You might lend the money, but you won't fall for the sob story.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

More sibling and neighbor interaction or, if you prefer, interference. You might not feel very sociable Easter morning until someone suggests everybody go on an adventure, e.g., a treasure hunt. If you let your intuition be your guide, you'll have a surprisingly fine time and obtain info that could be quite useful as the month ends. But don't be put out if you're asked to behave like a big brother or sister; you can't be a sex symbol all the time.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

How you avoid a run-in with the Devil will be the amazing trick you pull out of your sleeve on Monday. Just know that someone who pushes your buttons is about to push hard. This week power plays of the heart, among friends, can do more damage than those aimed at your prestige and political stance. Money, as always during Aries, is an issue for Fish, but after the sun and Saturn meet on Monday, at least one aspect of that problem should be resolved. Pay your respects to elderly folks who are worthy.

THE GLITZ! THE GLAMOUR! THE FASHION DISASTERS!

What is the sound of one town patting itself on the back? The Academy Awards, of course. But for those VIPs who live 3,000 miles west of the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion, 200 miles north of Elaine's, and not in Southie, there were two parties that provided a reasonable alternative to being at home, in pajamas, with a remote control.

Oscar Night America, to benefit Volunteer Lawyers for the Arts, billed itself as "the only Oscar Party in New England sanctioned by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences." (To quote a film unfairly snubbed by the Academy: "Whatever.") Held at the Roxy, the somewhat-black-tie gala attracted Aerosmith's Tom Hamilton and wife Terry, casting agent and lunachick Angela Peri, the North End's answer to Brando, Frank Annese, gallery owner Bernie Toale, human action figure Matt Demers and white-hot literary agent Todd Shuster, who was hoping that Good Will Hunting would win something because he's representing a biography of Matt Damon. Also there was imploding jazz singer Jeannie Flynn, whose bit part, as a slightly spastic Cuban dancer, in a movie starring Matt Dillon and Cameron Diaz, will probably end up on the cutting room floor, and whose actor-brother, Jackie, was edited out of As Good As It Gets.

Meanwhile, at the Four Seasons, the Mass Film Office threw its Seventh Annual Academy Awards Gala, which wasn't officially sanctioned by anybody, but which attracted acting governor Cellucci and assorted functionaries, Fully Grown Adults on the Block Joey McIntyre and Donnie Wahlberg, his mother, Alma, Tony winner Julie Harris, Olympic gold medalist and Newbury Street merchant Eric Flaim, former Oliver Stone assistant Kristina Hare-Lyons and her husband, Patrick, several Bruins, multiple demi-celebs from the local network affiliates, and radio personages Billy Costa and David Brudnoy, who was followed around all night by a camera-wielding documentary filmmaker whose blue-jeaned butt broke several hearts.

Also there: Irene Ng—the Harvard grad who plays Shelby Woo on Nickelodeon, nightclub owners Russell Robbat and Paul Barclay and low-brow movie writer/director Bobby Farrelly, whose movie Kingpin was also unfairly snubbed by the Academy and who will probably be the one to cut Jeannie Flynn out of his next film, starring Matt Dillon and Cameron Diaz.

Both parties boasted copious amounts of food and drink, giant TV screens on which to ignore the awards, lots of flashbulbs and TV cameras, occasional interruptions to announce that some guest had won something or other, and printed programs outlining the evening's festivities, which included Oscar trivia questions like [sic] "Who has the most acting nominations with 12?"

Blessedly, yours truly was at home, in pajamas with a remote control, by the time those two boys from Cambridge accepted their awards, but I do have one unanswered trivia question.

Who the hell is Dorothy Chandler?

MATT DAMON AND BEN AFFLECK, EAT YOUR HEART OUT

Community Servings' Life Savor benefit is a bit like that old parlor game where you assemble a fantasy guest list of famous people you'd like to have at a dinner party.

Granted, Jesus Christ and Albert Einstein weren't there, and given Boston's paucity of mega-wattage stars, the definition of celebrity has to be stretched somewhat (think Barry and Eliot of Jordan's furniture).

Nevertheless, the affair never fails to attract an impressive and noteworthy crowd. Spotted at this year's gala: several best-selling and/or critically acclaimed authors, including master of detective fiction Robert B. Parker and his fabulous wife, Joan, Robin Cook (whose new book, Toxin, has just been published), Chris van Allsburgh (whose kids' books have made him a deity among the Play-Doh set), Stephen McCauley (whose novel, Object of My Affection, has been made into a movie that's due for release this month) and his lover, Sebastian Stuart (whose first novel, a potboiler called The Mentor, was recently bought by Bantam). Also there: super-buff dance phenoms the Tap Dogs, Olympic hockey gold medalists Tricia Dunn and Katie King, New Republic chairman Marty Peretz (whose eulogy at a friend's funeral prompted an acquaintance to be quoted in the New Yorker, saying "Marty Peretz can clear a synagogue faster than a P.L.O. bomb threat."), former congressman Gerry Studds, telegenic talking heads Karen Holmes Ward, Lester Strong, Paula Lyons, Liz Walker and Mary Richardson, Suffolk County DA Ralph Martin, Hizzonah Tom Menino, fashion designer David Josef, and on and on down the food chain of fame to folks like yours truly.

Following a two-hour cocktail party at the Hotel Meridien, guests dispersed to 70 of Boston's best restaurants for long and leisurely dinners, after which they were deposited by trolley at the lobby of One Post Office Square, for an after-party where the following exchange was overheard:

"I ate with Joyce Kulhawik, so I got to hear all the gossip from the Academy Awards."

"Oh, yeah? Well, I ate with Harvey Leonard, so I got all the dirt on El Nino." ✦

22 Beloved Bartenders

Like swallows—as to Capistrano?—once a year, every year, about this time, THE IMPROPER anoints the most popular bartenders in town. Voting is by the ballots that appear in each issue, several issues prior to deadline. Ballots are primarily from customers, although we know some barkeeps try to stuff the mailbox. This year, some went to extremes. Attempted bribes came as t-shirts, photos, calls, office visits—stakeouts, even, of what was said to be an editor's favorite hangout. But pliant, we're not. And as we sifted among the more than 1000 individually cast ballots, patterns emerged. Welcome to the 1998 Top Tap Dawgs.

LETTERS

Defending Clark

Regarding Jerry Mackli of Brookline's letter (Uncommon Reaction, March 25) questioning canceled TV sitcom actor and comedian Anthony Clark's reported graee under pressure (Soroff/On, March 11), I don't mean to keep Tony's name in the media any longer than necessary, but instead to burst Mr. Mackli's balloon.

When I knew Tony at Emerson College he exuded confidence and professionalism, along with on-stage swings between a cynical, biting wit and a self-deprecating, pie-eyed bumpkinism delivery. The "truth" may be that he was an objective longview of the Hollywood business, tempered by its quixotic reality. It can be a game of inches, peppered with long nights at comedy clubs, bit parts in B-movies, inane TV commercials, canceled projects and unsuceessful easting calls.

If Tony had a fragile ego he'd perhaps be in a less public career. He may also derive strength from his friends, including his former Boston Common coworkers and fellow Emersonians, Max Mutchnik and Loni Denniberg, who produced and acted in the now defunct series set in the student union of a college in Boston. They're team players who will be around awhile, not the big babies who would burn their bridges by keying their producers' car as Mr. Mackli suspects. Besides I don't think the producer owns a BMW.

More On Tierney

It was great to see Maura Tierney on your cover and have my suspicions confirmed. When we were small, she, I and Lisa G. would spend lots of afternoons (when her family still lived in Roslindale) choreographing and singing popular songs, like S&G's Baby Driver and the Fifth Dimension's Age of Aquarius. Since then I've worked on and behind the stage of community theaters and Lisa worked the local dinner theater circuit. I'm pleased to know that we all pursued the dream to some extent and thrilled that Maura's attained it. My congratulations and a fond hello to her and her family

Women Kick Ass

I just wanted to drop a quick note to tell you that I do enjoy reading THE IMPROPER. I was so pleased to read your issue about the toughest Bostonians (Tough Enough, April 8) and see that two were women (although it should have been more). The article shows even though from appearances alone a woman can look beautiful and elegant, she can kick some butt and still be feminine (kick some ass with high heels). It is so refreshing to see that women can combine intellect with physical strength and have so much perseverance to do what they set out to despite objections.

Looking at Elaine Kwon shows how a woman can get her doctorate, become a tae kwon do champion and still find time to teach. I say, good for Carline Lemoine to not listen to what people say and do what you like, if a woman wants to box then she should.

Now That's A Woman

Having heard a great deal about Sylvia Sidney (Soroff/On, April 8) yet never really knowing what his/her real act was, I was pleasantly surprised to see Sidney profiled by the ever-witty Jonathan Soroff. Sidney is both funny—in a sarcastic bastard or bitchy sort of way—and shockingly entertaining. Once again Soroff is not afraid to let the punches fly and land where they land. As gracious as Audrey Hepburn and as sultry (jokingly) as Rosanne Barr, Sylvia Sidney handled herself like a first-class lady.

A Guiding Light

I just wanted to let you guys at THE IMPROPER know that your guide to Chinatown (Inside Chinatown, April 8) was right on the money. IN ITALIA, NON SI DICE SAMBUCA; SI DICE MOLINARI.*

MgM & Partners

In Italia non chiedono "una Sambuca." Chiedono "una Molinari." Perchè Molinari non è una sambuca comune.

Da oltre cinquant'anni infatti Molinari Sambuca Extra è una classica istituzione in Italia. Come il Colosseo a Roma. La Scala a Milano. Il "Davide" a Firenze.

Nessun'altra sambuca è così vellutata al palato come lo è Molinari. Ecco perchè nessun'altra sambuca può essere chiamata "Extra."

Per gustare l'unica Sambuca Extra al mondo chiedetela per nome. Molinari.

In Italy, they don't say Sambuca; they say Molinari.

In Italy, they don't say sambuca. They say Molinari. That's because Molinari is no ordinary sambuca.

For over 50 years, Molinari Sambuca Extra has been a classic institution in Italy. Like the coliseum in Rome. Like La Scala in Milan. Like "The David" in Florence. No other sambuca is as smooth as Molinari. That's why no other sambuca is permitted to call itself "Extra."

To enjoy the world's only Sambuca Extra, you have to ask for it by name. Molinari.

Fischer also teaches the art of caning.

Able to Cane

The Caning Shop at 2000 Mass. Ave. in Cambridge (547-3054) offers a new life for broken bottoms.

SINCE 1973, BILL FISCHER HAS TAKEN THOSE discouragingly useless and trashy-looking things—broken caned seats or backs of chairs—and beautifully resurrected them. At the simplest, he will replace the woven cane seats that stretch across decades of the familiar metal-trimmed Breuer chair. But what Fischer, who calls cane "comfortable, light and breezy," really specializes in, and lovingly repairs by hand with his staff, is the whole range of seats made from rattan, grass, rush, cattail, sea grass (which has a delicious natural smell in its coiled form), paper (very reinforced and twisted) and also those Shaker-style checkerboard cloth seats. The versatile rattan, which looks like a stick of bamboo, yields up various parts of its spaghetti-like strands to form the seat. Some are thickly woven in a trapezoid shape, others are much airier, as on the Lincoln rocker a woman who was Fischer's student 20 years ago is now having finished. Danish furniture of the '50s has distinctively thick and ropey seats, which, now that they're period pieces, deserve, if smashed, to be made whole. Fischer also offers informal classes on Wednesday nights (but not in the summer).

Dining Out at Home

Interactive Cuisine brings chef Julia Shanks into your home, where she cooks before your eyes, and you eat the "lesson." $55 per person. 617-424-1767.

The food-evocative Shanks.

SOMEWHERE BETWEEN going to a restaurant and having a caterer lies the kingdom of Julia Shanks, she of the wonderfully food-evocative name. And that somewhere is your own house. Interactive Cuisine involves all the luxury of chef-chic food, with the added aromatics of having it sizzled and grilled in your kitchen, along with a cooking-demonstration angle. Although it is Julia herself, veteran of Biba, Nora's in Washington and Bix in San Francisco, doing most of the work, bringing the food, serving it and cleaning up, you the hostess and your guests get to participate, stirring the risotto, bringing little mozzarella balls to life out of dry curd, wrapping the haricots tidily in chives, learning to use the knife with chef-like skill. At the least, you can watch Julia concoct phyllo cups, make the spicy romesco or sear the tuna, insider glimpses you just don't get at a restaurant. The menu-to-be is chosen by the hostess and Julia. Some people use Interactive just to expand their cooking horizons; others leap to higher stratospheres. One fan, Beth Schlager, has a club of five couples who employ Julia together. "You really get to enjoy the meal," says Schlager. "Julia improvises well, and you get to learn lots of little techniques you'd have to go to culinary school to know. And she's such a pleasant person."

The Enemy as Teacher

Hurt and pissed off? He's been there. Mark Rosen's Thank You For Being Such A Pain offers help in understanding your miserable relationships. Harmony Books, $24.

ONE UNWITTING STAR OF MARK ROSEN'S BOOK, Thank you For Being Such A Pain (Spiritual Guidance for Dealing With Difficult People), was his thesis adviser. Professor Impossible, says Rosen, a Ph.D. in industrial relations, "asked me in a nasty, vindictive way to make seven revisions, which he then didn't read for months." Rosen was furious, devastated. "This book comes out of healing," he says. The fascinatingly sour-and-then-sweet message is that difficult people give us a chance, both arduously grainy and surprisingly light, to work on the unfinished business that those nemeses provoke in us. Wonderful quotes begin each bite-size chapter, like the one from witer Katherine Whitehorn: "I am firm. You are obstinate. He is a pig-headed fool. Martin Buber philosophizes that "Conflict situations between oneself and others are nothing but the effects of conflict situations in one's own soul." Rosen, who teaches at Bentley College in Waltham, believes that mental exercises such as exploring your own contributions to the problem, remembering images evoked by the antagonist and learning to take on the tiger of the "shadow" brought out by these people, are ways to mitigate the annoying effects. A touch of Buddhism, a shift in perspective, and voila! The Person Formerly Known As The Jerk isn't.

A fascinatingly sour-then-sweet message.

OUR LITTLE MARGIE

Margie Clapprood's mouth could get her into trouble. Again.

WRKO's Howie Carr is threatening to air taped comments supposedly made when Clapprood, the former talk show host now running for Congress, was off-air. Unflattering comments. Raunchy, perhaps? Like "I'm also suffering from Shirley MacLaine self-actualization complex and a little bit of penis envy, which means that not only do I want to castrate and count your balls, I want them for myself."

Crude? Like "I leave you with the words of my dear sainted mother: fuck 'em if they can't take a joke."

Offensive? Like "In Sharon we fell off the left end of the universe two or three decades ago and nobody told us. In Stoughton, we call it Dorchester with trees."

Uh, ballsy? "Forgive me, Mr. Chairman. What we need is not your simpatico. What we need are those big brass things you have that go clinking every time you walk into the chamber."

Coy? "Small breasts, big car."

All the above was published in a December 1987 Boston magazine article by John Strahinich that embarrassed and immortalized Clapprood—then a state rep on her way to running for lieutenant governor—who contended she never said the bit about the boobs. The rest was history.

JUICED UP

Seth and Shari Woods are capitalizing on the sucess of their Metropolis Cafe in the South End to open a new restaurant in early May. To be called Aquitaine—Bar a Vin Bistrot, it will be in the St. Cloud building on Tremont Street. Named after the French region of which Bordeux is the seat, the place is set to feature an extensive wine list or, as the Woods put it, "a serious juice list."

Seth and Shari Woods

2,000 RMS, RIV VU

You think condos in the Back Bay and South End are seeing a real estate rejuvenation? The upsurge in home values is nothing compared to what could be the state's deal of the decade—in lovely Lowell.

Back in 1994, a pair of brothers and a friend took advantage of the depressed market and bought the former headquarters of Wang for $525,000 (now the cost of a nice two-bedroom on Beacon). Four years later, the rumor mill says Christopher and Brian Kelly and associate Lou Alvarado sold the complex to a San Diego developer for $103 million. That's 200 times the intitial investment.

HE'LL HAVE TO BE SPARTAN ABOUT IT

A batch of Bostonians made US Ambassador to Greece Nicholas Burns homesick last week when they hand-delivered him mementos of his superduper favorite boys of summer. The Bay State native, formerly of the State Department, was visited by local marketing executive Thalia Schlesinger (whose brother was Sen. Paul Tsongas), Superior Court Judge John Xifaras, his wife, Democratic powerhouse Marty Xifaras and former Dukakis cabinet member Amy Anthony. The group, all of Greek descent, were on holiday in the homeland for Easter, which falls later than here. Their friend, the freshly minted ambassador, invited them to dinner at the embassy—provided they brought Opening Day regalia, said Schlesinger. Burns, a BC alum, is a well known Sox fanatic. In fact, the Herald, editorializing earlier this month in favor of Burns' tough stance on terrorism, duly noted that with all the criticism he's getting, he might wonder if "Athens is worth missing an entire Red Sox season for."

STILL IN THE RUNNING FOR THE ROSES

We're very sorry to say that Bay State betting interests will no longer be represented by the top two contenders in the Kentucky Derby. Just one. As reported here last issue, Lil's Lad is owned in part by Centennial Farms, the Boston-based syndicate. But Lil hurt his ankle and has been pulled from the race. Halory Hunter, on the hand, as reported here issue before last, is owned by Boston Celtics coach Rick Pitino. And, as we said then—two weeks before Kentucky took the title again—and repeat now (well, it was a good line): As any fan of the NCAA knows, Pitino does well in Kentucky. Indeed. His horse won the Derby-prep Blue Grass Stakes April 11. Blue Grass, as in Kentucky.

OUCH

It cut to the quick when Globe columnist Eileen McNamara recently chided Boston magazine for supposedly courting publicity, suggesting it was similar to "when Boston Magazine sued The Improper Bostonian for 'trademark infringement' because the biweekly printed a 'Best of Boston' list as dubious in value as the monthly's original." Part of its dubiousness, no doubt, was our saying that "Eileen 'I'm writing as badly as I can' McNamara" was "just what the Globe needed: a white Patricia Smith." (Never mind that in December she was derisively referred to in Boston by Wendy Kaminer as "Eileen McNamara who may never have heard an allegation of child abuse that she didn't believe.")

AND IN THIS CORNER OF THE WORLD-CLASS CITY COMPETITION....

BankBoston—which, as we know, just gobbled up BayBank—is "small and lonely," The New York Times tells us, in a sea of big-boy mergers. In fact, the only big players in town, BankBoston and Fleet, are acquisition targets of Chicago's Banc One, for one. (So instead of sails and eagles perhaps we can look forward to slag piles on our ATM cards?)

GOOD THING GIRLS AREN'T CATTY

"Utter bullshit" is what Maggie Trichon of Maggie, Inc. modeling agency says of recent slurs in the Boston Herald against Miss Massachusetts, the new Miss USA, Shawnae Jebbia. The Inside Track column suggested last week that Jebbia (who's pictured here modeling in THE IMPROPER's pages) didn't live in Massachusetts but came here because the competition in state beauty pageants was dim and that she was a product of plastic surgery. "She worked for me for at least four years, as a full-time model," said Maggie (as reported in these pages a month ago), "so she absolutely lived here. As for the plastic surgery, she's had none that I'm aware of, and I'm usually privy to that kind of thing. And she certainly hasn't had anything in the past four years. She's a real sweetheart. I don't know why people are doing this to her. It's ludicrous."

Jebbia

But the above rock demigods are mentioned in Fred Goodman's nev book just as much as some Boston's famou rockers and impresarios lik Peter Wolf, Do Law and Ray Riepen. The former Rolling Stone editor chronicles Boston's early underground music scene qu extensively which leaves us wondering, which hill is that mansion on? Beacon or Chestnut?

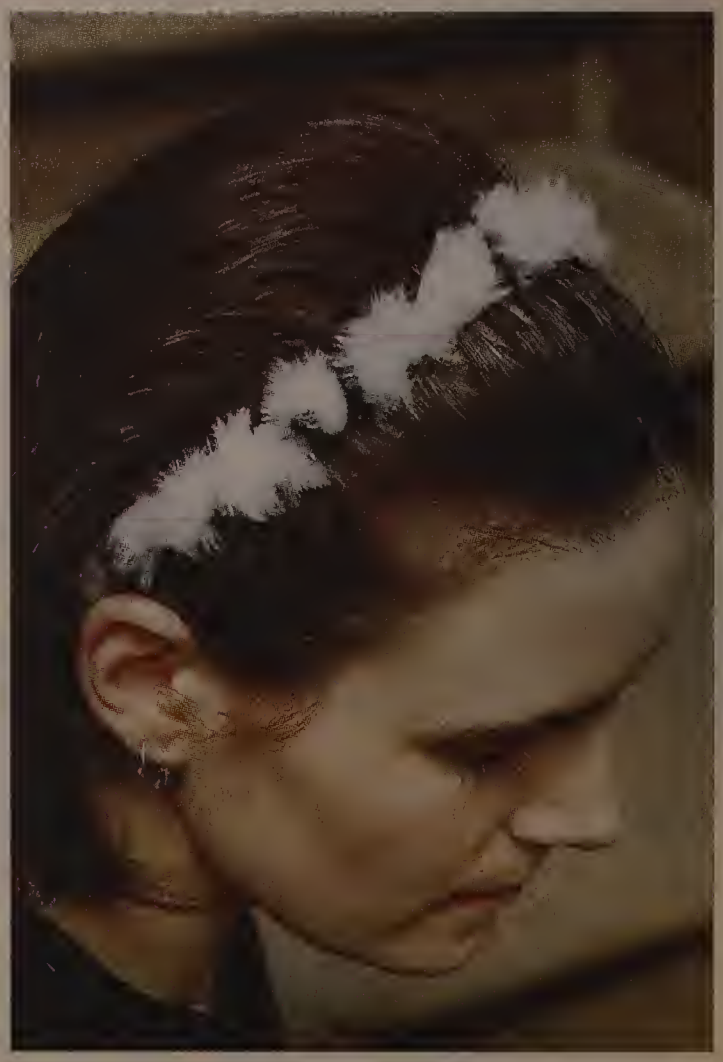
A REAL Irish Pub

You know you're in an authentic Irish pub for one of two reasons. The first is if you're actually in Ireland, drunk on Guinness and watching soccer (football) fanatics beat themselves over the head following the loss of their favorite club. The second is if the owner tells you he just imported the whole damn bar—piece by piece—from Ireland itself. The latter might seem kind of silly but its final installment is probably on the way to Boston as you read this. The Kinsale Irish Pub and Restaurant—its final resting place at 2 Center Plaza, Cambridge Street, Government Center—will open for business at the end of April and feature all things Irish, from the hand crafted chairs to the bartenders trained in the art of pouring a perfect pint.



PASSING SOME BUCKS

Actually saving some bucks. With Boston's brand-spanking-new CityPass any and every history and art junkie can get themselves into six of Boston's best and most popular visitor attractions like the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, the JFK Library and Museum, the John Hancock Observatory, the MFA, the Museum of Science and the New England Aquarium. The CityPass booklets can be purchased at any of the attractions' main entrances for a low $26.50 and are good for nine days from the first date of use.

How To Be Trendy

Aside from spending the big bucks on that fab leather handbag by Prada or bigger ducats on the new VW bug, the latest überhot fashion accessory for women around Beantown this spring seems to be the lovely hair piece pictured at right. Some call it a headcomb or a hairband. Hell! Some call it a headband. And bald-headed women out there usually call it useless. But jokes and the name game aside, this $4 product (available at Claire's Boutique in the Prudential Center) seems to be hitting Newbury Street trendoids in whopping proportions. In fact, seven of 10 female patrons sitting outside the lush Armani Cafe were spotted donning some form or another of these little buggers.

Beauty & TRUTH

LINEAR LOCKS ROCK

Straight hair comes out of the closet.

Flat straight hair with a blinding shine IS the rage these days. And for good reason: Nothing is sexier than a glowing, immaculate coif that celebrates hair health. The foundation of a now and wow look: a killer haircut that can be blow dried to perfection yet still look flawless when you have to splash and dash. For that kind of precision—delivered by a crew of scissor-wielding sexies that'll have you squirming in your chair like a Titanic fan—nothing beats the Vidal Sassoon salon on Newbury Street.

The current Sassoon team is solid, baby. No tense, catty vibe here; a gal can relax into the pampering. And what a babe parade! Meet a few of the Sassoon sweeties:

With his alluring '70s rock star vibe and a name straight out of Boogie Nights, Dirk Diegel is the hottest stylist for this year's looks. His cuts are friggin' flawless. But Dirk doesn't stop there. Place your locks into Herr Diegel's masterful hands for a blow dry and straightening iron job that would make sleek-maned Cleopatra frizzy with envy. And trust me: A good stylist's straightening looks far better—and lasts far longer—than anything you could do yourself at home.

Out of Vidal's rigorous bootcamp comes the sultry and scrumptious Joseph Melone. Joey's solid discipline shows in his precision cuts. But his dashes of inspiration are what makes this gal say meow. Watch out, Warren Beatty—here is a man who loves to make women beautiful.

Jimmy Cyr is the sire of up-dos and cuts that are smooth, hip and classic as a Chanel suit. On a budget? Vidal is world-renowned for its superior students whose practice cuts are better than you'd get at most of the clip joints outside of Newbury Street. One lad in particular struck me as talented: Jack was his name, and gifted snipping is his game. Tip him a wink from me if you see him.

Spring Break-Outs

It makes your cells say oooh.

Your skin is doing the super freak. It's dry, tight and flaky in some areas yet cranking out the oil faster than Exxon can spill it in others. Welcome to spring, my pet: the season when facial skin is at its worst—especially for those boys and girls out there with normal to dry façades—Boston's most common skin type.

In this cruel season, reach for a face mask to calm your aggravated hide without parching further your pretty puss. The testers and I looked for skin helpers that make your cells say oooh. And we found some winners.

Clinique's Skin Calming Moisture Mask hydrates dry skin without clogging the pores. For $18.50 you get a whopping 3.4 oz. of the only moisture mask that also smothers pimple flare-ups.

Over-scrubbing broken-out skin tears at the face, leaving your blemishes crusty and nasty. What's a starlet like yourself to do to eliminate dead skin build-up—especially the kind that comes from spending a night with AHA or other battery acid-like treatments on your face? Bath and Body Works makes a gentle, effective face scrub that works amazingly well on all skin types. Eight bucks gets you 4 oz. And their Deep Cleansing Mask is perfect for PMS skin that needs an overhaul without drying. A hefty 6 oz. sets you back a mere 12 smackers. See you at the swan boats!

TIPS FOR LIPS

Oh, the mighty powers of lip liner. These colored pencils help prevent lipstick from bleeding. And they make your mouth stand out more, while extending the life of your lipstick. Whether you are a lipstick master or part-timer pout painter, here is a tip or two from Pia's bag of lip tricks:

 For long-lasting color that won't budge or smudge, try using your pencil liner as a lipstick. Apply it on top of a lip balm, then blend gently with your fingers. Do this trick before applying your lipstick for extra staying power.

 If using a lip brush is too anal, but you demand perfection, do what my tester gals and I do: Apply your lipstick, then top with liner for an immaculate line.

 Don't you just hate it when your lipstick has faded, leaving a ring of lipliner around your smackers? Don't look like a dirty bathtub: Shade more of your lip than just the outside with the pencil. Then when the lipstick goes, a subtle color will stay.

 Fine-tune a less-than-perfect lipstick color with a lipliner in a compensating shade. For example, you can take the orange out of your red lipstick by using a plum-toned lip liner.

What companies make superior lipsmacking liners that come in fabulous shades, don't leave crumbles like a cheap crayon and go on smoothly without tugging? Years of testing reveal an all-star cast of liners ready to run rings around your mouth:

For stronger, uninterrupted lines that can also be smeared for subtler looks or used as a lip stain, nothing beats Shiseido's Lip Liner Pencils. This wonder stick has been in my toolkit for five years now. Second place goes to discount dynamo Wet 'n' Wild. I was surprised, too, by the quality of this cheapo pencil, but it goes on great in a range of snacky, youthful shades.

Sheerer pencils are perfect for beginners—and for the lighter, less-obvious shadings that are in this season. Leave it to the couture of cosmetic lines, Guerlain, to create my testers' preferred pencil for elegant, discreet effects. Trish McEvoy and Clinique also satisfy our lust for the subtle. So stick a pencil in your holster and draw, cowgirl!

Pick-up sticks that do the trick.

Improper BOSTONIANS

POINTS SHAVING: The first annual "Men's Dinner" to benefit the Pine Street Inn raised more than $200,000 from a $500 per person benefit at the Wang Center on Monday, March 30, augmented by $40,000 brought in by the crowd-pleasing promise from Wang CEO Joe Spaulding and Bob Woolf CEO Larry Moulter to shave their venerable beards, if the money was forthcoming. In addition to Moulter and Spaulding, the event co-chairs were radio impresario Richie Balsbaugh and Four Seasons hotel general manager Robin Brown. Local comedians Kenny Rogerson, Chris Maguire, Jim Dunn and Mike Donovan entertained.

THE BIG NIGHT: An April 3 benefit at the Westin Hotel at Copley Place raised $821,000 to aid the Big Brother Association, which helps some 600 boys from Greater Boston. Guest speakers included Marian Heard, CEO of the United Way; UN Ambassador Andrew Young; football legend and TV commentator Lynn Swann plus Motown's renowned Smokey Robinson.

Hungering for More

By Betsy Sherman

Taste of Cherry is as disarming and deep as Abbas Kiarostami's previous works

EONS AGO, THE ENGLISH PUNK BAND The Clash was marketed to the American audience as "The Only Band That Matters." In today's film world, sometimes it feels as if Iran's Abbas Kiarostami is the Only Filmmaker That Matters. Kiarostami's moral—not moralizing—tales cut so deep, and his way of making a narrative blossom is so particular and imaginative, that one wants to shake people into discovering him.

A veteran filmmaker whose career has survived Iran's political upheavals, Kiarostami is known for using nonprofessionals in his casts, often children (in Where Is the Friend's House?) and the film he scripted, The White Balloon). There is a semi-documentary quality to some of his better-known films (And Life Goes On, Through the Olive Trees, Close-Up). But realism, even neorealism, is hardly Kiarostami's purpose. Authenticity of behavior in the people we're watching is coupled with the keenly modern sensibility of Kiarostami's storytelling. He doesn't try to mask the filmmaking process, and his films have a witty self-reflexiveness. Kiarostami's latest masterpiece, Taste of Cherry (co-winner of the Palme d'Or at the 1997 Cannes Film Festival), is as disarming and fulfilling as his previous works.

The writer-director draws us into a highly charged situation with quiet, subtle means. His protagonist, Badii, has literally and figuratively dug himself a hole. We observe this 50-ish man, who seems well educated and middle-class, as he drives his modest car on the outskirts of Tehran, past construction sites. Groups of day laborers ask if he's hiring; Badii passes them by. He's looking for men who are on their own.

Badii picks up a hitchhiker, a tired soldier going back to the barracks. Badii proposes a detour. As he questions the young man—a shy Kurdish farmboy—we see dwellings give way to trees, which become sparser as the car approaches the desert. Badii pulls over and proposes a well-paying, one-time job: The next morning, the soldier is to come to this spot, to the hole in which Badii will have committed suicide during the night, and must shovel dirt into the hole. Loathe to accept, and terrified at what will happen if he refuses, the boy soldier runs away.

We follow the cryptic, cadaverous-looking Badii as he drives, stops, makes roundabout conversation with men he meets (who are outsiders, such as Afghans and Turks), and in some cases reveals his purpose. With a hushed intensity, the film makes us wonder, will the sunset that Badii sits and watches at the close of this day be the last he will ever see? And what kind of man would agree to shovel dirt on him?

We learn practically no facts about Badii's life, nor what has made him want to kill himself. Kiarostami keeps us hungering for answers, but leaves us in a life-like state of confoundment. He provides no music to manipulate our emotions. There is only one overtly stylized visual, as Badii's shadow blends with that of a torrent of gravel. As in his previous films, Kiarostami gives us a significant bit of landscape to grasp, the "dead man's curve" of road to which Badii brings the men to make his proposition, and where he may take his last breath.

The characteristic Kiarostami brand of humor—a dark humor that bubbles up in moments of tension—is very much present as the film's ironies run the gamut from comic to poignant. Taste of Cherry is a film about reaching out, although Badii, like many a Kiarostami character, is too stubbornly involved in the pursuit of his goal to realize he is doing something so simple. The character who gives Badii the strongest argument in favor of life—he extols simple pleasures such as the film's title—is a taxidermist for whom death is part of everyday life.

Taste of Cherry's closing passage melds the real and the surreal, the transcendent and the mundane, and finds this master storyteller pondering his own power. ✦

Barry and Eliot's ad takeoffs feel as comfortable as a favorite old chair

I KNOW THE COMMERCIAL I WANT TO SEE: Barry and Eliot of Jordan's Furniture are driving around a Jordan's Furniture showroom in a car, not speaking. The radio is playing "Da-Da-Da," an obscure German song from the early '80s that this ad will make famous. They nod their heads in a slight groove with the music. They spot a chair, load it into the car and drive around some more, not speaking. They notice how lovely and inexpensive the chair is, and they're glad they got it at Jordan's Furniture. The voiceover intones, "In the store of life there are shoppers and there are couch potatoes." The super comes up: "Jordan's Furniture. Shoppers wanted."

I love Barry and Eliot's ad personae. They, more than any other retail advertiser I can name, know their audience, know their tastes and know how to laugh at themselves and with the audience all at the same time. They pick out classic ads from Lexus, Dockers, Nike and other corporate giants and parody them to a tee. They could do a bang-up takeoff of the Volkswagen ad above, considering there's already a furniture link in it.

Jordan's commercials always seem genuine. The antithesis of this is Filene's Basement, which uses an artificial jingle ("The thrill is back") to pretend that there's something thrilling about the stores. One radio ad actually has a line of copy that goes something like this: "My husband gives me a thrill, but not like the one I get from shopping in the Basement." While there is probably a large market out there for sexually or emotionally starved women, is this Tennessee Williams approach the hook you want to use to do business with them? Husband won't sleep with you? Buy a new suit. No date tonight? How about some off-priced shoes to give your pathetic life a modicum of meaning?

Jordan's always comes at its advertising with a sense of humor and a sense of how to sell furniture. The takeoff on the Dockers commercial, where the woman with the foreign accent says "Niee sofa" in a foreign language to one of the brothers is great at showing off the product. Even those mattress ads with Marjoric Clapprood and Charles Laquidara (which are takeoffs on Sprint ads) use the guest "celebrities" to a great effect to let us know that they sell more mattresses than anybody ("Anybody? Anybody!").

When Barry and Eliot appear as hotshots on the basketball court, ripping off a Nike spot with Michael Jordan, they end up falling on a mattress—the perfect product placement. They've recently revised that ad to have a man's and woman's voice playfully ranking on them, with her pointing out that a stunt double is used when one of the brothers approaches the basket. This new twist is reminiscent of those classic Molson beer radio spots, with the man and woman good-naturedly sparring. It's a double sub-reference, not easy to carry off.

When they roll the ball bearing around the sofa, a direct hit on an old Lexus ad, they give the product a lot of screen time without boring the viewer to tears. An update of that ad shows them dressed in white lab coats again, but this time they have a much plusher sofa. The ball bearing just sinks into it, as the brothers do at the end. It's more proof that they're as comfortable in front of the camera as they are in the furniture they're hawking. ✦

Maal blends techno, reggae and acoustic

MUSIC

Magic Afro-pop

By Paul Robicheau

Spiritual grace and natural exuberance are Baaba Maal's soaring trademarks

BAABA MAAL HAS AN EXPLANATION for his soaring voice. "We live in the big, open country," says the African singer who has eclipsed his Sengalese countryman Youssou N'Dour in commercial creativity. "When you sing, you sing for the space, for all the space you see in front of your eyes. So you make the vocal very strong, and make the vocal go far away in the land."

"In the beginning, we didn't use PA systems," Maal adds on the phone from Dakar, the capital of Senegal. "We were just in front of 100 or 200 people, and you have to sing and make everyone hear your voice. I was like that as a child—all the musicians from this part of Senegal or West Africa have very big voices."

But few have taken them as far as Maal, who performs at the Roxy May 1 with his 13-piece band Daande Lenol (meaning "voice of the people"). The magic of his Afro-pop lies in his natural blend of modern and traditional elements, from techno-beat and reggae with electric instruments to lilting acoustic ripples with the 21-string kora and talking drums.

"It can be very strange between people who see the two kinds of music far away, one to the other, but for me, I don't see that," says Maal, who struck the right modern-traditional balance on his Grammy-nominated 1994 disc Firin' in Fouta, and is releasing Nomad Soul in August on Palm Pictures, the new label from Island founder Chris Blackwell, who introduced Bob Marley and King Sunny Ade to the world long before "world music."

"In the traditional music, we have a lot of elements that can go in a very modern music, and it's easier for us now to do it because the technology can help us," Maal says. "In some songs, the start is just an acoustic thing, and when the song is growing, you see modern elements coming little by little, and at the end, you see just this big meeting."

One example of Maal's bridging musics past and present, old world and new world, is his incorporation of the yela, an African rhythm said to be the root of modern reggae, inspired by women pounding grain. "A lot of songs come from the women making food, and doing the pounding," Maal says. "Another kind of yela music that I did an experiment with is now very close to rap music, even the way of singing it."

For his new CD, Maal worked with techno whiz Howie B ("He's ready to experiment with new sounds in this kind of music") and Brian Eno as well as past producer Simon Emmerson. "He knows very well the ideas I have that I want to put together to make my songs on a modern level without also losing the essence of the music, the roots of the music, or feeling."

Feeling is one of Maal's trademarks. A spiritual grace infuses many of his songs as naturally as exuberance takes over others. And it's all channeled through his distinct, resonating vocals, sung in Pulaar and other African languages, as well as English and French.

But it's a wonder Maal even became a singer. He didn't come from a family of griots, the traditional storytellers deemed by an African caste system to rightfully become musicians. "I'm lucky because I come from a town that's very cultural," says Maal, who belongs to a subgroup of the nomadic Funali people in northern Senegal. Both his parents sang—his mother in ceremonies, and his father as a muezzin, calling Muslims to prayer.

Not only does Maal's high-scaling voice at times reflect an Islamic influence, but his father helped shape the content of his songs, which includes commentary on social, economic and ecological hardships.

"My father didn't agree with me when I was starting to sing," Maal says. "He said if you follow making music, telling strong messages that people can use in their life to make better their life, I agree with you to play music. But if you just go there because you just want to do something else, I don't agree with you." Now fans everywhere are in agreement. ✦

Movenpick Extravaganza

By Nini Diana

Hurry up to Taste the Nation...nibble on Allston...enjoy Monet and IPA

IT SOUNDS TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE, doesn't it? It's like a food court where the food is actually edible, fresh and not fried, and it's coming to the Prudential Center in August. A worldwide operation, Marché Movenpick is a combination market, restaurant, cafe, wine bar and beer garden. Marché Boston will be the company's first US enterprise. The facets of this new culinary extravaganza are manifold, in fact too huge to cover fully. But if the appearance of Swiss cows in addition to people dressed as cows at Marché's preview party is any indication, it should be nothing short of interesting. When asked why Boston was chosen as the US launch city, Marché's president Jorg Reichert said "...[Boston's] openness to new and exciting things." He must not have met anyone yet.

Rollerblading cows at Marché Boston.

The place to meet people, at least those in the food community, is Taste of the Nation. The yearly food fest is being held once again at the Black Falcon Terminal, on April 23. Taste, as it is affectionately called by its board of directors, is organized by Share Our Strength in conjunction with this year's chairman at large, Andy Husbands, chef/owner of Tremont 647. Guests at the event walk around with a food tray cum wineglass holder, so you can eat drink and be merry without spilling.

Perhaps you are a provincial type and attempting to taste the whole nation is more than you can swallow. If so, a small scale food festival might be more to your liking and a Taste of Allston Village the perfect venue to indulge that need. Designed to raise money and breathe some life back into the business district of Allston, which has been suffering since they discontinued the A branch of the Green Line, this taste is being held May 3 at the Doubletree Guest Suites hotel in Allston. Tickets are $25 for one or $40 for two.

This April seems to be a month full of festivals (mostly concerning food). Le Bocage restaurant in Watertown takes the concept a step further by adding the art of Monet to the theme. Throughout the month, replicas of the impressionist's work engineered by Polaroid are on display, and for sale at the restaurant. Chefs Edward and Susanna Tolini designed a menu inspired by the work, which includes dishes from the Normandy region in France as well as a dessert of banana ice cream, supposedly one of Monet's favorites. Doubters can be assured that the replicas are not simply snapshots of the famous works. To see is to believe I guess.

I'll admit it, I'm completely enamored with the food business and all the peripheral people who drift in and out under its transom. Not the least of whom are the guys over at Tremont Brewery who, if you have been reading this column faithfully since I started writing it, released their nonpareil Ale in bottles last year at this time. On May 1 of this year Chris Lohring and Alex Reveliotty, owners of Tremont, are again stunning the beer drinking community by making their traditional summer IPA available in bottles (previously only available on tap). It may seem like small potatoes to some, but keep in mind that during his college years (not so long ago) Lohring was selling pretzels from a pushcart in Downtown Crossing. ✦

Our brunch is the ideal remedy for Sunday morning hangovers. Even the ones we didn't cause.

Featuring eggs, omelettes, carving station, breakfast & lunch entrees, and pastry station. All for $12.95. Voted "Best Brew Pub" by Boston Magazine and Improper Bostonian. 755 Boylston St. Boston, MA 617-424-8300.

Courses are served in high style.

DINING

Lively Brazil

By J. Charles Mokriski

Consistently great entrees underscore bargain-bin prices at Cafe Brazil

A DIAMOND IN THE ROUGH, THE CAFE Brazil occupies an unprepossessing storefront on busy Cambridge Street in a light industrial area of Allston. Despite its indifferent surroundings, the lively eatery exudes hospitality, beginning with the parking provided in a small lot across the street. Inside; the restaurant is simple but cheerful, with two small dining rooms accommodating about 70. The walls are blue, somewhere between eggshell and turquoise. Well placed mirrors gleam. Black and blue composition tables are set with crisp white cloth napkins.

Cafe Brazil's wine list is very limited but mercifully reasonable in price. A 1995 Grand Vasco Dao ($14) from Portugal was light but flavorful. Even better was the 1995 Morningstar Chilean Merlot from the Rapel Valley ($15), rich and tannic, not at all flabby like many lower priced Merlots. The house bread, however, was a downer. Soggy supermarket quality loaves are a far cry from the hard crusted Portuguese rolls we had been expecting. On a pleasant note, at least for those leery of excessively spicy dishes, Cafe Brazil serves its heat, in the form of chili and garlic, as separate condiments that diners can add to suit their own tastes.

Among the appetizers were a selection of Tira Gostos—Brazilian tapas—pastries deep fried in egg batter ($1 each). We found the Pastel Zinho (ground beef, olives, potatoes, onions and scallions) and the Coxinah (chicken, olives, onions and scallions) heavy and dry, but the Quibe (ground beef and wheat) was far better—moist and flavorful, with an intriguing hint of mint. Best among the appetizers was the Frango Passarinho ($3.95) deep fried chicken thighs, described in the menu as Brazil's answer to "Buffalo Wings." These plump treats were at once moist and crunchy, with a provocative garlicky kick.

Cafe Brazil's main courses were consistently excellent. The Minas Especial ($10.95), lemon-garlic marinated boneless chicken breasts with sauteed cabbage and fried banana, was a particular success. First, a mound of perfectly cooked al dente white rice and a generous portion of tangy cabbage were brought on a large oval plate. Then, a platter heaped with succulent slices of boned chicken breast and fried bananas arrived sizzling from the kitchen. Though deep fried, the chicken was light and fresh—no hint of stale oil—and it was complemented but not overpowered by the garlic. The bananas provided a perfect sweet counterpoint. Cafe Brazil's other main courses were served in the same stylized fashion, rice and vegetables were brought first on dinner plates, and the meat preparations arrived second, in hot ramekins or on sizzling platters, fresh from the kitchen. Camarao Cafe Brazil ($12.95) yielded a generous array of crunchy shrimp sauteed with garlic, wine and scallions. The Frango Cafe Brazil ($10.95) was the same preparation, with chicken breasts substituting for the shrimp. Both were served with delightfully al dente carrots, broccoli and zucchini.

What often passes for Brazil's national dish, Feijoada ($10.95), is served only on weekends. Consisting of black turtle beans simmered with pork knuckles, ribs, tail, rind and sausage, Cafe Brazil's Feijoada Completa was rich and flavorful, but the task of sorting through the bones and fat was tedious, and what had seemed like a gargantuan portion was cut down to modest proportions when all was said and done. The dish is accompanied by Farofa (a melange of casava meal, onion, bacon and eggs) and Couve (pleasantly bitter sauteed collard greens), both first rate. Perhaps our favorite main course at Cafe Brazil was the Rabada ($10.95), meaty oxtail, simmered very slowly to the point of perfect tenderness, like a beef osso bucco. The intensely flavored meat and the vegetables with which it was cooked—carrots, tomatoes, broccoli and zucchini—rendered a delicious, rich gravy that made us regret even more the lack of good crusty loaves to sop it up.

Cafe Brazil's desserts included a credible Pudim ($2.50), rich eggy custard with a sweet caramelized top, Arroz Doce ($2.50), creamy rice pudding, and Torto Abacaxo ($2.95), a light, refreshing coconut pineapple confection somewhere between a cake and a pie.

Service was friendly and efficient. Live music adds to the ambiance on weekends. Best of all, Cafe Brazil's reasonable prices make it one of the better bargains available on the Greater Boston scene. ✦

WINE

Serve Well Chilied

By Sandy Block

The hottest, spiciest dishes can be elevated by a complementary vino

WINE AND CHILI? YES, IT'S ALLOWED. In fact, my extensive research indicates that depending on the wine, and maybe the weather, this is a combo that can live, work and play together just as well as chili and the foamy stuff. But watch out: Not all bowls of chili are created equal, and there are some that spell merciless death to the flavors of any wine.

Particularly with the spiciest dishes, drinking wine that has a subtle or delicate flavor makes no sense. Chances are its taste will be obliterated the moment you start eating. So the first requirement is you still want to be able to taste the wine after the food's served; second, you want it to be refreshing; and third, most desirable and elusive of all, you want the flavors of the chili and the wine to actually have some effect on one another that elevates both.

Once upon a time there were three categories of wine I drank with chili dishes: cold, very very cold, and just barely in liquid form. Then I discovered that some dishes tasted delicious even with room temperature red wines, but these generally featured the kind of low-key flavors that caused any hard-core fireeaters nearby to wonder out loud if the chef had begun to lose it or whether he'd always been a wimp. While this debate was going on, I always had ample time to ponder why some wines tasted better to me with these dishes than others.

Robust or highly astringent wines aged in oak increase the hot spiciness of chili dishes. Is this good or bad? You make the call. First, taste the chili. If it's too weak for your jaded palate, immediately put a high alcohol oaky California chardonnay on ice, or, if you like things really really hot, open a tannic, barrel-matured, full-bodied red wine such as a California Cabernet sauvignon, a Barolo, or a Chatcauneuf du Pape. That should do it. If it still doesn't work, add some tabasco.

What if the chili's too explosive for your mature sensitivities, what's the wine solution for cooling it down in a hurry? First, stay away from anything aged in oak. Second, avoid highly alcoholic wines from hot climates, unless there's a little bit of sweetness in their flavors. Third, rule out any wine that's sharply acidic. To tone things down, anything mild, understated and accented with gentle fruit.

Fruity wines cushion the heat. You can and should be very irreverent when drinking a bottle of wine with your chili. First and foremost, Vinho Verde from Portugual, light, slightly spritzy, accented with lemon and lime and balanced off with some sugar. Chill it and go nuts for six bucks a bottle. Second, drier German Riesling, particularly with the lighter chilis, or West Coast Chenin Blanc, featuring a generous bite of tart apple and pear flavor. Third, soft, smooth, mellow wines that have little harshness and are neither sweet nor fruity. Candidates: Soave Classico, some pinot grigio, semillon, fruit-driven Maconnais chardonnay, Chilean merlot.

One of my favorite chili wines is Australian Shiraz. This works especially if there are tomato or smoky flavors evident in the dish. Don't spend a lot of money though because it turns out that chili is a very democratic, even populist, concoction. The funny thing is that the most expensive, powerfully constituted dark Aussie wines, the ones with strong accents of vanilla and intensely peppery flavors, almost never work as well as the fresh, fruity, straight-ahead exuberantly raspberry-scented wines that sell for less than $10. Something else that fits the bill is a piquant red zinfandel from California, particularly one that's made to be juicy and ripe ($12 and under in a store) rather than big and bold ($15 and up). ✦

Soroff/On JIM KOCH

IN 1985, JIM KOCH SPARKED THE MICROBREWERY REVOLUTION, FOUNDING the Boston Beer Company, makers of Samuel Adams. Although he's the sixth generation in his family to become a brewer, he took a circuitous route to get there. Born and raised in Cincinnati, he holds Harvard undergrad, business and law degrees, and spent seven years as a management consultant. Koch (pronounced "Cook") created Sam Adams based upon a recipe—found in his father's attic—from his great, great-grandfather's brewery in St. Louis. In 1995, the company went public, and it's now the seventh biggest beer producer in the country.

Jonathan Soroff: Is a Harvard MBA worth the paper it's printed on?
Jim Koch: It's like getting "USDA" stamped on your butt if you're a cow. It doesn't mean you're any better. It just means the inspector checked you out and stamped your butt.
JS: Are microbreweries threatening to take over the planet?
JK: It sometimes seems that way, but in fact they represent only one out of every 200 beers consumed in the US.
JS: Finish this sentence: Budweiser tastes like...
JK: Like it always does. You can drink Bud your whole life and never get a bad beer. That's not true of micro-brews. The big brewers mass-produce a perfectly acceptable product that offends no one, so in some ways, Bud is just as difficult to brew as Sam Adams.
JS: You do your own radio spots. Ever worry that you'll sound like an idiot?
JK: My wife says I have the perfect face for radio, and people have asked if the ads were recorded posthumously, but no. I only talk about what I know, which is beer.
JS: What's your favorite place to drink a Sam Adams?
JK: I took two bottles to 23,000 feet once, up the highest mountain in the western hemisphere, in Patagonia. I had to sleep with them to keep them from freezing, but I got 'em to the top and they tasted good.
JS: Aren't all these flavored beers—like pumpkin and cranberry—getting a little silly?
JK: Yeah, but beer has been made for 6,000 years, and hops have only been the principal spice for 400. Before that, people used things like ginger and roots, which survive in non-alcoholic form, as root beer and ginger ale. So the flavored beers are reviving some of the historic brewing tradition, but you have to be careful. There's a limited number of flavors that work well in beer.
JS: You're big on historical accuracy?
JK: Somewhat. A few years ago, I was looking at medieval beer recipes and one called for something that fascinated me because of its name: Grains of Paradise. I called a guy who knows everything about spices, and he found them in West Africa. We used them in two of our ales, and it was kind of cool to use an ingredient that hadn't been in beer for centuries.
JS: What's your net worth?
JK: Good question. It's mostly in Sam Adams stock. I have between four and five million shares, and they're trading at around $9. Add in my house and my 1992 Honda.
JS: You're now a publicly traded company. What's to stop Anheuser-Busch from taking you over?
JK: I have all the voting shares.
JS: Then what's the biggest threat to your business?
JK: Ignorance and apathy on the part of beer drinkers.
JS: Will any of your kids follow in your footsteps?
JK It's their choice, but my son worked in the mailroom and my daughter is going to work in the brewery, so maybe.
JS: True or false: Miller Lite tastes great and is less filling.
JK: It's certainly less filling. Chemically speaking, light beer is actually thinner than water.
JS: If beer only lasts four to five months in a bottle before going stale, how much of what's in stores is stale?
JK: From the big domestic brewers, almost none, because it sells quickly, but with imported beers, a majority, because it takes a while to get here and people don't buy as much.
JS: Should the legal drinking age be 18?
JK: That's not really the issue, because a lot of 18-year-olds have access to alcohol. It's teaching kids responsibility, and in America, we have a stupid system where you're not allowed to have ANY alcohol until you're 21, and then you're allowed to have as much as you want, and you're expected to act responsibly.
JS: So the European way is better?
JK: Yes. My kids have been around beer their whole lives. Since they were four we've had a rule, which is that they can have beer whenever they want, as much as they want; they just have to drink it with me. So they've learned how to drink. They've also been to beer festivals, and they've seen drunks. If you're 14 and you see a drunk, it's not something you wanna be, but if your first experience with alcohol is a quart of vodka in the backseat of a car, that's a prescription for disaster.
JS: Is a well-crafted beer as complex as fine wine?
JK More. A well-crafted beer has about a thousand different flavors. A fine wine has 30 or 40.
JS: Germany's beer purity law—doesn't it smack of fascism?
JK: It sounds sort of foreboding, but it's the oldest consumer protection law in the world. Beer is a significant part of their diet, and they wanted to make sure impurities weren't allowed, whereas 30 years ago in Canada, there were people who died because cobalt was used to keep the head on beer.
JS: Does the term "beer belly" offend you?
JK: No. People ask why I don't have one, and I tell them what my father said: "There's food in the beer, but no beer in the food. Stick to beer." Food makes you fat.
JS: Head on a beer: How important is it?
JK: It indicates the quality of the malt. It's pure protein, like meringue, pushed to the surface by bubbles, and a beer with high quality malt has more protein.
JS: So who's the most famous Sam Adams drinker you know of?
JK: Bill Clinton...talk about great head. ✦

THE 4TH ANNUAL

Best Barten

COMBINING THE KNOWLEDGE OF AN ALCHEMIST, THE TECHNIQUES OF A MAD SCIENTIST AND THE MYSTIQUE OF THE MOST POPULAR PERSON IN HIGH SCHOOL, THESE REVERED MIXOLOGISTS HAVE EARNED A PERMANENT PLACE IN OUR HEARTS.

Raindrops on roses and whiskers on kittens are fine, but when it comes to a few of our favorite things, a truly great bartender ranks much higher.

After all, what other profession is expressly designed to make the average schmoe feel like the king of the world, even if the sensation is partially alcohol induced? Who else can greet you after a horrific day at work or a bitter spat with the spouse, and—inside of 15 minutes—have you laughing at a joke, relaxing with your favorite cocktail, enjoying a convivial atmosphere and dismissing your troubles as trivial?

Not even your dog—or your mother, for that matter—can do all that.

Problem is, great bartenders don't grow on trees. If they did, we'd live in the forest.

That's why we go to the trouble of assembling our annual list of Boston's most beloved bartenders. With the ballots sent in by you, our savvy readers, and our own considerable expertise as patrons of various watering holes, we've compiled our fourth annual line-up of the stars in their field.

Each of the 30 bartenders listed here represents that magical combination of qualities that elevates mixing drinks for a living to an art form. All of them have that je ne sais quoi that places them in the pantheon of greatness.

If your favorite isn't among them, blame your own apathy in not having nominated him or her. Inclusion is based upon the number of votes received, and/or personal services rendered to those of us who call the shots here at the magazine. In the interest of fairness, only one bartender per bar made the cut, although several establishments employ more than one contender. Bartenders who have appeared in previous years and received a significant block of votes are listed in the Hall of Fame.

So here, without further ado, we proudly present the IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's Most Beloved Bartenders, Class of 1998.

Stephen Ferlazzo • Division 16

Wed.-Sat. nights

A six-year veteran of bartending and an alumnus of such popular places as Grillfish and Villa Victoria, he now ministers to the international crowd of club kids who swarm the bar at this police station-turned hipster hangout. Slightly flashy in his style, he's known for dipping his finger in 151 and setting it on fire to light patrons' cigars or cigarettes, and for doing some fancy maneuvers with bottles while mixing cocktails. Age 29, he claims to have invented around 80 drinks, although his most frequent requests are for martinis, and he's written martini menus for the bars where he's worked, as well as hosting martini parties all over town for private clients. "A major dreamboat," gushes one admiring female. "He makes me feel like every day is Valentine's Day." With a following so strong, this particular Cupid has decided to branch out, tending bar at several area nightclubs a few nights a week.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Gin Blossom

One and a half ounces Bombay Gin, a half ounce of Grand Marnier, three ounces of grapefruit juice and a dash of Grenadine. Shake over ice, strain into a martini glass and garnish with a cherry.

Michael Burton @ Restaurant Zinc

Tue. and Thurs.-Sat. nights

"It's all about love," says the improbably good-natured, strawberry blond Burton, 26, who's just about as cute as they come. A Plymouth native, he was raised in Saudi Arabia, where his father was an engineer and where, he notes, "people are only allowed to drink on the sly." After a six-year stint in the Army, including service in the Gulf War and Panama, he took up tending bar, and he's been working at this gathering place for the young, rich and beautiful since its opening, just over a year ago. Known for being soft-spoken and eternally smiling, he's like a cross between Casanova and your kid brother—seductive and endearing in equal parts. "Cutie-pie!" raves one devotee. "He has a great ass and wears tight pants," notes another. It also doesn't hurt that once he's met you, he never forgets a face. With his aw-shucks demeanor and eagerness to please, he just might be the sweetest guy tending bar in Beantown.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Zinc Cosmopolitan

Two parts Absolut Citron, a dash of Cointreau, a squeeze of fresh lime, a splash each of cranberry juice and simple syrup (a mixture of sugar and water). Shake over ice and serve straight up, with no garnish, "except love."

Paul Barry @ Grafton Street Grill

Sun.-Wed. days; Upstairs at the Pudding, Thurs. nights

This 34-year-old native of Waterford City, Ireland—which, he claims, "is the center of the universe"—has been tending bar since he was 12 years old and once wrote to NASA requesting the opportunity to become the first bartender in space. At this down-to-earth, Harvard Square eatery, he's known for his mischievousness and ability to B.S. "I never kissed the Blarney Stone, but I don't need to. I'd probably take a chunk out of it," he says. Able to write people's names or draw a clover leaf in the foam on a Guinness—a rare skill attainable only after years of practice—he's famous for telling jokes, making fun of his regulars and otherwise entertaining a widely varied clientele that ranges from students and professors to cops and construction workers. "He prayed for my mom when she had heart surgery," says one regular, while another notes "He's quick with a joke or to light up your smoke." "Let's just put it this way," says a third. "He's Dr. Feelgood."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Goalpost

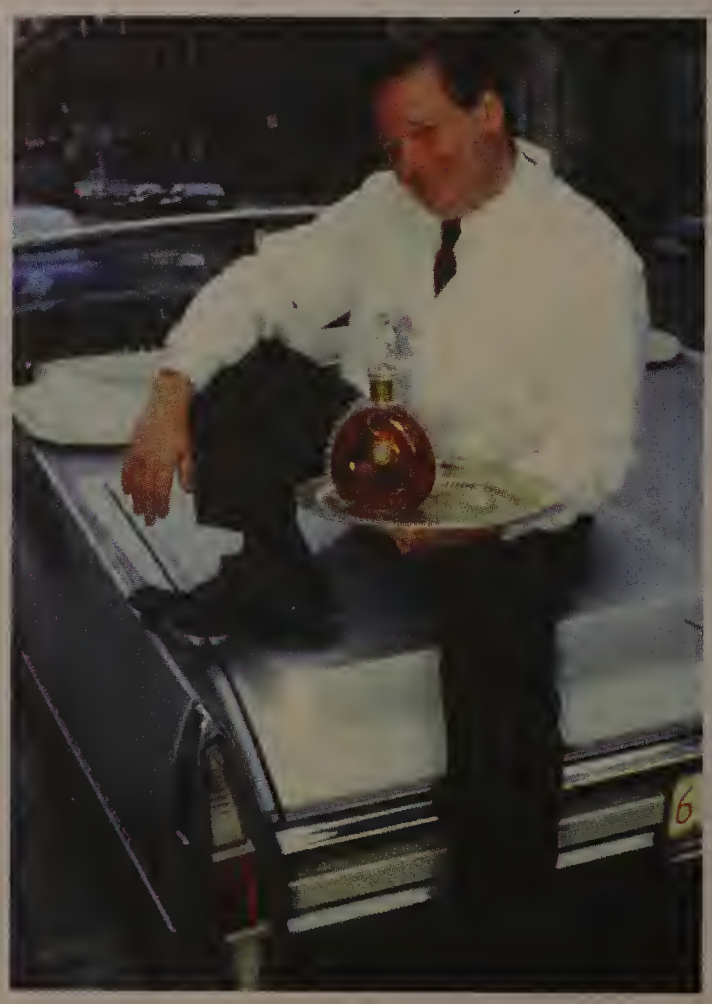
One part Triple Sec, two parts Absolut Citron, a half part Essencia Orange Oil, a half part Chambord, sour mix to fill. Shake and pour over ice, or blend with ice in a blender.

Jennifer "Jen" Mercaldi @ the Tam

Sun. nights, the Sports Depot, various nights, usually Mon., Fri. and Sat. nights

By day, this fanatical sports fan, 24, works for Entertainment Sports Equities, a marketing and promotions firm that plans and manages sporting events like the tennis tournaments at Longwood and the L.P.G.A. tour. She moonlights as a bartender "because it's fun," but unfortunately, doesn't get to watch much of the game when she's working—even at the Sports Depot—because she's too busy slinging drinks. That's not to say that she doesn't root for the Boston teams, especially the Red Sox, or talk sports—intelligently and authoritatively—with customers. Her athletic streak also means that patrons at her bar never wait long for a drink. "Wicked quick," notes one regular. "She's like Speedy Gonzalez." "Wild and crazy," says another. She modestly admits "I can be fast when necessary, but I'm usually pretty calm." Except when one of the Boston teams score, that is.

SIGNATURE DRINK:



The Monica

Two parts Absolut Vodka, a half part each of Amaretto and Grand Marnier and a splash of milk. Shake and strain into a large glass. Serve on the rocks and garnish with a cherry.

Bill Shapiro @ Grill 23

Wed.-Sat. nights

A 20-year veteran of bartending, he quit in 1990 to go into the insurance business. In 1995, he was having lunch with a client at this high-powered businessman's enclave, and he met the general manager, who offered him a job. "I've been here ever since," he says. "Bartending's a job you never get out of your system. I love it, and Grill 23 is one of the best bars in town." Age 40, he still sells insurance, as well, and credits the same qualities for his success in both fields. "I'm very authentic and honest. No bullshit. So people trust me." His regulars—a professional hodgepodge of lawyers, venture capitalists, real estate and stockbrokers, doctors and investment bankers—have come to rely on him for attentive but unobtrusive service and friendship coupled with discretion. Classic in his style, he carries a cigar cutter and extra-long matches with him, and generally goes the extra mile for patrons, who shower him with gifts like the monogrammed gold lighter he recently received. One of his regulars once sent a friend to Shapiro for a birthday lunch, and Shapiro gladly picked up the tab until the friend could repay him. "I've never been taken care of like that," raves a devotee. "He anticipates my every need and knows what I want, even before I do."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Citron Gimlet

Two and a half parts Absolut Citron, a half part Rose's Lime Juice, and a splash of Cointreau and cranberry juice. Top with 7-Up. Serve on the rocks, in a wine glass. Garnish with a squeeze of lemon.

Kathy Chapman

Quentin Sullivan ◎ The Cellar

Thurs., Fri. nights

A former technical writer, teacher and computer programmer who still does some freelance editorial work on the side, at 48 he's well-qualified to relate to the students, high-tech professionals and other cerebral types who congregate at this Cambridge hole-in-the-wall. "We're located halfway between funky, down-at-the-heels Central Square, and worldly, cosmopolitan Harvard Square," he says, "so we get a very interesting mix. It's a place where nice people can hear themselves think and each other talk." Sullivan's strong suit is trying not to make anyone wait for a drink and always giving the impression that he's happy to see them. "I'm lucky," he says. "I work on two nights when people tend to be in a good mood." As for the appeal of the two-story bar, he says, "We're cheap and we're here," citing the excellent beer selection, with 10-12 brews on tap, and a relaxed atmosphere that lends the place the aura of having been there forever, when, in fact, it only opened eight years ago. "He single-handedly keeps the whole place rockin'" raves one fan. "Cool, quiet and in control." In fact, he's so popular with his regulars that one of them even agreed to marry him. After meeting his wife while working behind the bar, they tied the knot two years ago.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Ipswich I.P.A. Black and Tan

Pour Ipswich I.P.A. into a frosted mug. Using an inverted spoon, top slowly with Guinness, pouring carefully, so that the two layers remain separate.

Erica Frené ◎ The Rack

Wed.-Fri. nights

This aspiring actress, 26, smiles through everything, including when she's confronted by rude and obnoxious people. "I firmly believe that you can make anybody smile back at you, and once they do, they're on your side," she says. Currently training to run the San Diego Marathon for the Leukemia Society of America, she exhibits similar stamina at the bar, where the crowd often gets 10 people deep and she's forced to mix drinks as fast as humanly possible. Her regulars—mostly financial district/banking types, who live in the suburbs but visit this upscale pool hall to unwind after work—tend to be men, and many of them are smitten. "F-----g gorgeous, with unbelievable legs," enthuses one. "She's the bomb!" She's equally attentive to women, though, and when she has time to chat, she catches up with her regulars. One of her personal trademarks: Telling really bad jokes really badly. "I'd marry her if I could," claims one fan, but it might burst his bubble to know that she's dating a professional hockey player.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Sour Apple

One part Midori, one part Southern Comfort, a splash of lemonade. Shake over ice and serve as a shot.

Shawnee Thornton ◎ Franklin Cafe

Thurs. nights, Restaurant Zinc, Sat. nights

By day, she teaches pre-school, which can be very similar to bartending, she says. "People at the bar are sometimes more difficult than little kids, and sometimes I find myself using the same tactics to keep them in control." A native of New Mexico, age 23, she was raised in Montana and came to Boston "for a change of scenery—small town to big city." Bartending, which she's done since 1993 at such places as Cafe Mojo and the Rattlesnake, "is a great way for me to unwind and let loose. I don't have to be as reserved or cautious as I do as a teacher." "Hotter than a June bride" and "Centerfold sexy" are how two regulars describe her looks, and not surprisingly, she deals with a lot of come-ons and bad pick-up lines. "I explain that I'm engaged," she says, "and I show them the ring if they don't seem to get it." Her loyal clientele have followed her from bar to bar over the years, and they praise her speed, conversational skills and an arsenal of off-color jokes that she reserves for customers she knows she won't offend. An added bonus: she's not afraid to experiment with her hair, and recently went from blonde to redhead.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Orange Cocktail

One part Stoli Orange, two parts orange juice, a splash of Cointreau and a dash of Chambord. Shake over ice and serve on the rocks.

Ferguson Herivaux ◎ West Street Grill

Wed.-Sat. nights

A native of Haiti, this super-smooth bartender, 26, formerly worked at Les Zygomates and plans eventually to open his own nightclub. "I'm not sure Boston's ready for it, but I'd like to run a place that bridges the gaps in the social scene, putting everyone together. That's my trip," he says, "and I'm testing the market now." As for his style behind the bar, it can best be described as poetry in motion. "It's like dancing," he says. "Very free-flowing movement. It's all about rhythm, and I could do it with my eyes closed." His regulars—a mix of yuppies, international types and stalwart partygoers—love to watch him, as he makes tending bar look like ballet. "He's awesome," says one fan. "He's like jazz in human form." He's also brilliant and extremely well educated, about as handsome as they come, with a voice like liquid valium, a calming manner and a flawless memory for names and faces. In other words, a true gem.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

The Mexican Cosmo

Four parts Tequila, one part Cointreau and a splash of cranberry. Shake over ice and serve straight up in a martini glass, as a shot, or on the rocks. Garnish with a twist.

Maia Merrill ◎ Baja Cantina

Fridays and two other rotating nights

A back-to-back, two-time winner of The Pint and the Pen Writing Contest—which requires entrants to pen 750 words about Guinness—she freelances for Massachusetts Beverage Business and is earning a master's degree in children's literature at Simmons College. "I write in verse, but I decode when I'm speaking to mere mortals," quips Merrill, age 27, who plans to become a children's book author but has worked as a bartender for seven years, including stints at the Sports Depot and the Spirit of Boston. Her relaxed and humorous style have earned her an enormous following, and her intelligence makes her a reliable authority on topics like the bar's selection of 55 Tequilas. Together with her "bar husband," Bill Stevenson, she presides over Friday nights. "I do gossip. The real girl talk," she says. "It's a very close-knit bar. We watch movies—mostly campy things—on the VCR, and it's very festive. We even wear glitter beads." "She's poetry in motion," says one admirer. "A demigodess." Another sums up her appeal by saying, "She could make the Grim Reaper smile."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

3M Martini (a drink she invented, which took third place in a martini contest)

Three parts Absolut Citron, one part Midori, the juice from five wedges of lemon, a splash each of 7-Up and soda, and 3/4 of a packet of sugar. Shake over ice and strain into a chilled glass. Top with a splash of sour mix, and garnish with a lemon curl.

Alfredo "Fredo" Bartolozzi Jr. ◎ Small Planet

Tue.-Fri. nights

The son of a legendary bartender at Locke-Ober, he began working alongside his father and was the youngest person to man the bar in that restaurant's long and illustrious history. "I started out in a very traditional place," he says, "doing Manhattans and martinis and talking stocks. Now, I've gone the other way." Age 33, he's worked for five years at this casual Back Bay eatery, although he still tends toward formality and can't seem to break the habit of calling people "Sir." His regulars—an odd mix ranging from Newbury Street hair stylists to advertising executives—laud his imaginative variations on the martini, his unaffected charm and his unfailingly upbeat attitude, which is evident in his willingness to help with the various charitable efforts, like the Boston Food Bank, that the restaurant and its staff actively support. "Never an empty glass in front of me," says one fan. "He genuinely enjoys all types of people," says another. "Plus, he's the only red-headed Italian I know."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Madras Martini

One part Stoli Orange, one part Finlandia Cranberry. Chill and strain into a martini glass. Garnish with orange zest.

Bob Griffith ◎ Crossroads

Mon., Fri. and occasional Thurs. nights, Cambridgeport Saloon, Sat., Sun. days

A native of Southie, age 28, he still lives there, and he began working in bars as a bouncer, which quickly taught him that "killing 'em with kindness makes life a lot easier; that way, if you do have to get tough, they know you mean business." Having worked at the dearly departed Rat in Kenmore Square, he tends bar to earn a living while he finishes a degree in graphic design and desktop publishing. Crossroads, an Irish-style college bar, caters to a largely BU crowd, while the Cambridgeport Saloon is a beer and whiskey joint that attracts everyone from punk rockers and dart teams to accountants and postal workers. Because the most popular drink at both places is beer, Griffith carries a big, old-fashioned bottle opener, wrapped like a hockey stick, in his back pocket. "One of a kind, with the patience of a saint," says an admirer. "A real Irish sweetheart," says another. The true secret of his success, however, seems to be his skills as a listener. "He's always willing to lend an ear," says one regular, "and he never looks bored."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

The Animaniac (his invention)

Two parts Absolut Citron, one part Finlandia Cranberry, one part Chambord, a splash of cranberry juice and a squeeze of fresh lime. Shake over ice and serve as a shot.

Miss Chris Knievil ◎ Avalon/Axis

Sun. nights, The Spot/Quest, revolving nights

In addition to manning the bar wearing women's clothing, he performs in drag at clubs like Jacques. No one will be shocked to learn that he's studying theatrical costume and set design. One look at his functional but fabulous ensembles—little velvet swing dresses and the like, which suggest a slightly slutty schoolgirl—and it's obvious why, at age 25, he reigns supreme at gay Boston's Sunday night cha-cha palace. Anyone who's never been there before, or the few straight people who come in, seem to gravitate toward his bar. "I think it's because the drag is so exaggerated," he says. "It's a novelty. I'm not another shirtless go-go boy." Playful and flirtatious, he admits "I'm certainly not someone you'd want to fuck with, but I'm not a bitch. There's no P.M.S. going on behind my bar." What does go on are raucous good times, fueled by his outrageous sense of humor and imaginative way with a cocktail shaker. "He's larger than life," notes an admirer. "Huge breasts, but they're false." According to another: "He makes ordering a drink like going to a three-ring circus."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Liquid Cocaine

A half ounce each of Malibu Rum, Amaretto and Southern Comfort, and a splash of pineapple juice. Shake over ice and serve as a shot or on the rocks.

Kathy Chapman

Denise Booras @ the Alley Cat

Fri. and occasional Sat. nights

Her background in fashion and retail explains why she's one of the best dressed bartenders in Boston, and while she hopes to get back into the clothing business someday, at 24 she's become a favorite at this high-energy, Boylston Place playpen for good-looking twentysomething yuppies. "Bartending is the only job where I can imagine having this much fun," she says. "I don't think anything could beat the atmosphere. Once the music comes on, and people start pouring in, I'm in a very upbeat world. It's not hard to smile all the time." In addition to a naturally sunny disposition, she has a good memory for drinks, which she whips out at an amazing pace. "I work on weekends, so there's a pretty high turnover at the bar. I have to be extremely efficient, but I still try to be friendly." As attentive to women as she is to men (a surprising rarity in female bartenders), she loves it when customers compliment her on a job well done. "I'm here to help them have a good time, and it's nice to hear that I'm doing that." Regulars praise her consistently excellent drinks. And one other thing: She's been known to dance on the bar.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Butterball

Pour Butterscotch Schnapps (preferably chilled) into a shotglass and top with Bailey's, taking care to keep the two layers separate.

Ricardo Rodriguez @ Buzz

Sat. nights

Hot, hot, hot. A native of Colombia, age 27, he's earning a graduate degree in child studies at Tufts, and by day, he works for the Boston Buyers Club, which provides vitamins, nutritional supplements and other consumer goods to people with HIV. On Saturdays, he can be found downstairs at this disco inferno, where the buffest boys in Boston come to sweat their butts off, and where he tends bar wearing jeans and a tank top, although his worshipers wish he wore less. "Just watching him open a beer is a treat," says one admirer, and anyone who's seen him can see why he's posed shirtless in ads for the nightclub and the Fenway Community Health Center. "I don't just crank out drinks," he says. "I know my clients well, and I try to catch up with them each week." Sorry, boys. The criminally sexy Rodriguez has a boyfriend.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

The Buzz Pink Lemonade

1 1/2 oz. Absolut Citron, 1/2 oz. Triple Sec, a splash of cranberry juice and sour mix. Shake over ice. Serve straight up or on the rocks.

Randy Hedrick @ Anago

Tue.-Sat. nights

A North Carolina native, age 36, he's been bartending off and on for 18 years, while waiting for Martin Scorsese to walk up to his bar and make him a movie star. "I've always had the philosophy that you could teach a monkey to mix drinks. It's about personality and interacting with your customers," he says. Together with co-worker Patrick Pound (who also received a huge number of votes), Hedrick puts on a nightly show, with ribald humor and over-the-top antics that keep his regulars—mostly urban sophisticates—in stitches. "He's completely twisted," says one. "That's why we love him." "Tom Cruise has nothing on him," and "Three Fs—funny, fabulous and fast," are typical of his fans' compliments, while others praise his memory for drink preferences and his ability to make everyone feel at home and included. "A person at my bar is the same as a person in my living room," says Hedrick. "I'm a host, who happens to make one helluva cocktail."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Anago Cosmo

Four parts Stoli Gold, one part Gran Torres orange liqueur, a splash of Capri lemon liqueur, a splash of vintage Cassis, a squeeze of lemon. Shake on ice, "until your arm drops off," strain and serve straight up. Garnish with a lemon twist.

Christine Murphy @ 575

Wed.-Sat. nights

A graduate of BU, age 23, who's trying to figure out what she wants to do with her life, she's been bartending at this low-key clubhouse for denizens of the Back Bay for the past year and a half, having previously worked at Davio's. Behind the bar, she's laid-back, very chatty and often silly, having been known to perform stupid human tricks using glasses, plates or whatever else is handy. "I feel like I'm out on the town when I'm working," she says. "It's like a big, ongoing cocktail party, and I'm in charge. Basically, we're an upscale, neighborhood bar, and there's a group of about 15 regulars who come in four or five nights a week." Because most of them know each other, the conversation at her bar sometimes gets highly personal. "I know details about some of my customers' lives that I don't know about my friends." According to one person who considers himself both, "She always makes sure there's something interesting going on. She's not hard to look at, either." As for her bartending skills, one fan writes, "They should clone her and put one of her in every bar."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Snowy Martini

Two ounces of Stoli Vanilla, an ounce of Creme de Cocoa and a half ounce of Amaretto and Bailey's. Shake over ice and serve in a chilled martini glass.

Adam Herzlich @ Eat

Mon.-Wed., Fri. and Sat. nights

A former journalist at Boston magazine, he took a break from that trade to became one of the most popular bartenders at Sonsie, then Cafe Mojo and 575, and now this funky, Union Square eatery, in which he invested after falling in love with the place and the concept. "It feels like your grandmother's living room," is how one regular describes it, "very welcoming and homey, with comfort food and absolutely no pretension." Presiding over the bar in back is Herzlich, 30, who says, "I try to have more fun than anyone else in the room and not take anything too seriously. We're not doing heart surgery. It's food and drink, so it's not hard to keep it light." Although he'd rather be a rock star or a successful song writer, tending bar, as far as he's concerned, is the next best thing. His regulars, whom he describes as "folks who are into life's simple pleasures," praise his laid-back demeanor and his wry sense of humor, as well as a genuine interest in their enjoyment. "With that bald head, he looks surly," says a fan, "but he's actually the sweetest guy in the world.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Skyy High Martini

Pour a liter bottle of Skyy Vodka into a container holding one diced pineapple and two diced mangoes. Allow to soak for one to two weeks. Filter out fruit. Shake liquid vigorously over ice, and serve straight up, in a martini glass. Garnish with a blueberry.

Sally Wong @ Bay Tower Room

Mon., Tue., Thurs. and Sat. nights, occasional nights at Europa

An instructor at the Boston Bartending School, where students are awed by her knowledge and skill, this funky Asian firecracker started bartending to put herself through Northeastern, where she studied business management. For several years, she mixed Scorpion Bowls and other Polynesian exotica at both of the Hong Kong restaurants, before taking over the bar at this upscale, businessman's haunt on the 34th floor of 60 State St. "I never get sick of the view," she says, referring to the restaurant's sweeping, 270-degree vista of downtown and the harbor. "Not many bartenders have something so beautiful to look at while they're working. And I love pointing out the sights to tourists." Age 34 and the mother of two, she says her "customers keep me sane, and I love to chat. Everyone needs to unwind, and after two drinks, I tend to know their whole life's story." The soul of discretion, she can be trusted to keep a secret, and to offer sage advice on occasion. "She's everything you want in a bartender," says one fan. "There's nobody better in the city."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

California Mudslide

A half ounce each of vodka, Kahlua and Bailey's, a scoop of Haagen Dazs vanilla ice cream and a dash of milk. Pour into a blender, mix, and serve, straight up and frozen.

Robyn Pitchford @ Cottonwood Cafe (Back Bay)

Mon. nights, Tue.-Fri. days

With 20 years of experience, she says, "you'd think I'd be good by now." And she sure is. Age 44, she learned her trade at such landmarks as Casablanca, where she worked for 10 years, and her professional philosophy is: "You can go anywhere for a drink. It takes a good bartender to make people choose a particular bar." Her popularity is due to her talkative nature, personalized service and the ability to make everyone feel welcome at her bar, whether they're in a group or alone. "My customers"—mostly 25-40-year-old corporate types—"work hard, and when they come here, they deserve some pampering. Everyone likes to be taken care of." She's also known for telling jokes, and has more memorized than a Borscht Belt comic. "The bar is my own little stage," she says. "I try to be entertaining." Obviously, she succeeds. "She's the only person I know who can make my boss laugh," claims one regular. "Other bartenders can't carry her shorts," says another.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Cottonwood Classic Margarita

Two parts Tres Generations Tequila, one part Citronge Orange Liqueur. Fill with sour mix (preferably made from fresh lemon and lime). Shake, blend, or serve on the rocks or straight up. Garnish with lime.

Mike Mika @ Harvey's

Tue.-Sat. nights

This 10-year veteran of such hotspots as Clarke's and Cafe Mojo hails from "beautiful Chelsea-by-the-sea," and in addition to his bartending duties also does finished carpentry, "to keep some balance in my life." Age 29, his style can best be characterized as assertive, as he never hesitates to help a customer decide what he or she wants, but the true key to his magnetism is his ability to find common ground with anyone. "I get the most eclectic mix of people—old, young, black, white, straight, gay, blue collar and professionals, the Symphony crowd and neighborhood people" he says. "The trick is listening to them and finding the common denominator." He always makes time to chat with patrons but also knows when a customer would prefer to be left alone, and he always accommodates his customers' moods. "A great storyteller" is typical of his regulars' accolades. "He's got the best attitude of anyone I know—completely easygoing."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Ketel One Dirty Martini (Harvey's house drink, he makes at least 100 per night, because, as he puts it, "it's a sexy-looking cocktail.")

Pour Ketel One Vodka over ice. Add two dashes of olive brine, and no vermouth ("It kills the drink, and unlike the old vodkas, the new, cleaner ones don't need it.") Shake vigorously and strain into a chilled glass. Garnish with three big olives.

Dina Moeller @ Il Bacio

Sat. and Sun., day and night

During the week, she runs her own video production company, producing demonstrative evidence for use in court cases. On weekends, she helms the bar at this romantic and swank North End eatery, whose name means "the kiss" in Italian. "It's very relaxed but it's a romantic place," she says. "Lots of couples, and people on dates. Women sometimes feel threatened by another woman, so part of my job is to sense when to pull back. Once in a while, I'll see a couple who are obviously on a first date, and if it's awkward, I'll try to help the romance along, without intruding." A traditionalist, age 31, she serves lots of martinis, sidecars, Manhattans and stingers—classic cocktails that she mixes with precision and flair. Explaining her appeal, she says, "I'm not an idiot, and I think people like that." Her regulars—a mix of artists, business people and some tourists, ranging in age from 25 to their mid-50s—appreciate her straightforward, sarcastic style. "Her sense of humor is as dry as her martinis," says one female fan. "And she doesn't flirt with my dates." Sounds like a recipe for success.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

The Il Bacio Chocolate Martini

Two and a half ounces of Stoli Vanilla and a half ounce of Creme de Cocoa. Stir gently over ice and strain into a martini glass rimmed with Godiva Chocolate Liqueur and dipped in cocoa powder. Drop in two Hershey's Kisses.

Stephen Kittredge Cunningham @ Joe Tecce's

revolving nights

Greased lightning with a smile, he's the author of The Bartender's Black Book—which has gone through seven editions and four updates. He also wrote the Marriott Bartender's Book and knows how to make every drink you've ever heard of, as well as many you haven't. In 1978, at the age of 14, he got a part time job at Crane Castle in Ipswich, which provided his introduction to bartending. After a stint in the Army, he worked at Jacob Marley's in Newburyport, for the Marriott Corporation, and several other bars, before coming to work at this landmark North End eatery. His regulars are like family, and he celebrates birthdays and holidays with them, as well as listening to them shout out the wrong answers to Jeopardy and Wheel of Fortune. Otherwise, the conversation at his bar revolves around the two most important things in life—food and sports—and the TV is tuned to cooking shows or the game. "He knows the job from A to Z," writes one regular. "Quick as a whip and observant," writes another. A third, probably not joking, claims, "I watched him mix drinks when he was five. It was Kool-Aid." The consummate pro, age 33, he's invented more than 100 cocktails, and his favorite question is, "What'll ya have?"

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Boston Massacre (invented by his ex-girlfriend)

Fill a tall glass with Ice. Add equal parts Bailey's, Grand Marnier, Frangelico, Irish Whiskey, Kahlua, Amaretto and Dark Creme de Cocoa. Top with milk or cream and shake over ice. Serve on the rocks.

Jeffrey Mills @ Oskar's

Thurs., Sat. and Sun. nights, Tia's, Wed.-Sat. in the summer, and Sonsie, Tue. nights

A corn-fed hunk from Ohio, age 24, he's a full-time acting student at B.C. and has started to do some modeling. Understandably, he's a big hit with the ladies, who praise his willingness to listen and his down-to-earth, mid-western manner, as much as his good looks. "A smooth-talker," "pick-up artist" and "a real lady's man" are some of the admiring comments from his male following, one of whom is eternally grateful because "he always introduces me to beautiful women." He's also fast as quicksilver, and there's never a line for drinks at his bar. "It's all about presentation," he says. "I try to be as efficient as possible, but I also spin bottles and go out of my way to present everything attractively." A major draw for this super-trendy Leather District bar, it also doesn't hurt that he has an elephant's memory for names, faces and what people like to drink. "There was at least a month between the first and second time I went there, and he still remembered that I drink scotch," reports one devotee. "That's why I keep going back."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

The Jeff Ref 99

Equal parts vodka, Triple Sec, lime juice, Midori, pineapple juice and cranberry juice. Shake over ice and serve as a shot.

Donny Richard @ Lily's

Tue. and Thurs. days, Wed. and Sun. nights

A career bartender who has worked at the Marshall House and Legal Sea Foods, at 27, he's been tending bar for five years and says that his greatest skill is matching a drink to a patron's personality. "For me, it's not like going to work," he says. "It's like going to meet my friends. I even enjoy the tourists." With its piano bar, cafe and disco, there's always plenty going on at this Faneuil Hall hangout, but regulars flock to Richard's bar because he treats everyone as an individual, no matter how frenetic he gets. He also admits to sometimes using a bit of showmanship, flipping bottles and performing tricks. "A wit as dry as the Sahara," "Total satisfaction," "Shows everyone respect" and "Smooth as silk" are just some of the compliments heaped on him by admirers. Perhaps most telling, though, is that some of his biggest fans are excellent bartenders themselves. As the saying goes: It takes one to know one.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Springtime in the City (his own invention)

One ounce of Absolut Courant, a half ounce of blackberry brandy and three ounces of ginger beer. Mix and serve on the rocks, in a snifter. "Very refreshing," he assures us.

Beth and Jill Lacey @ Bob the Chef's

Jill: Sat. nights; Beth: Thurs. nights

Double your pleasure, double your fun. As bubbly as the champagne and beer they pour, this tag-teaming pair of twins, age 34, take excellent care of everyone who sits at the bar of this soul food institution. Jill began working there first, and Beth was such a frequent visitor that it was natural she should eventually join the staff. Of course, confusion has ensued. "I'll have people continue conversations with me that they began with Beth," reports Jill, "or I'll order something for myself from the kitchen and find Beth eating it." The twin thing, however, also adds to their appeal as bartenders. "Being a twin, and so close to somebody, makes you interact with others better," claims Jill. "Even in the most challenging situations, we're able to keep our cool and our friendly smiles." By day, Jill works for the city and Beth is a speech therapist, which means that both have more to talk about than the weather. "An awesome twosome," says one fan. "It's too bad they weren't triplets, or quadruplets, for that matter." We wholeheartedly agree.

SIGNATURE BARTENDING TIP:

"Always pour Guinness very slowly. It's very hoppy and it will foam too much if you're not careful. Also, always serve a beer with a head. Not only does it look fresh, but it tastes better, although I don't know why."

Alex Durso @ G Lounge

Wed.-Sat. nights

A fast-talking wiseass, he's a part-owner of this Leather District hotspot and one of the people responsible for making the neighborhood a destination for hipsters-in-the-know. A native of Milton and prep school graduate (Thayer Academy), his bartending experience includes West Street Grill, Daisy Buchanan's and the Rack, and he worked for five years as a hotel concierge at the Westin and the Sheraton. His bar, which attracts an intimidatingly good-looking crowd, has had lines a hundred people long, waiting to get in on weekends. Inside, the scene is unapologetically trendy, but unpretentious, with overstuffed sofas and a laid-back atmosphere. Gregarious and outgoing, Durso, 26, doesn't hesitate to give customers endless grief if they snap or whistle at him. "He's like bartender in a '40s detective film," says one fan. "No bullshit. Super-cool."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Blue Orchid

Two parts Absolut Courant, one part Chambord, a splash of cranberry juice. Shake over ice and serve straight up in a martini glass.

Geoffrey Fallon @ Milano's

weekdays and Tue. and Sat. nights

He has a degree in writing and says, "So, in other words, I'm a career bartender." Age 26, his true vocation is stand-up comedy, however, and he uses the bar at this Italian bistro to hone his act and try out new jokes. "It's a great source for new material and to rehearse. Behind the bar, I just do my act." A regular at open-mike nights in comedy clubs, he describes his routine as "a strange combination of intellectual observations and fart jokes," and judging by his admirers' comments, he's hilarious. "Funny, funny, funny," and "Always comes close to making me pee in my pants," are typical remarks, although one fan, perhaps under the influence, waxed poetic, claiming, "He's the island of humor and delight in a sea of depressing and obnoxious bartenders who look at you as if to say, 'Hi, I'm Death!'" If his acolytes are to be believed, he also makes the best Bloody Mary in Boston. "There's rarely a rush at lunch time," he observes, "so I get to hang out with my regulars, doing really stupid things, giving them a hard time, and taking their crap." An added attraction: He rarely has the same haircut from week to week.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Moscow Winter Punch

One part each of Stoli Orange, Stoli Raspberry, Stoli Strawberry, Stoli Peach, Midori and Malibu Rum, a splash each of Grenadine, cranberry and orange juice, and a squeeze of lime. Shake over ice. Serve on the rocks. Garnish with lemon, lime and cherry.

Josh Briggs ◎ 29 Newbury St.

Wed.-Sun. days

"I've never worked anywhere like 29," says Briggs, age 24, who's been tending bar for four years, including several at sophisticated New York nightspots. "The cast of characters is hilarious. It's a sit-com waiting to be written." His regulars are an endless show of the witty, wealthy and off-the-wall, and Briggs, a musician aiming for rock stardom, ministers to them with endless good will. "He's the most reassuring presence," raves one admirer. "At lunch, after I've been dealing with stress and assholes all day, he's there to help me keep my sanity." Laid-back and unfailingly good-natured, nothing fazes him, and he handles rude or pushy patrons with admirable aplomb. "I've seen him deal with the most obnoxious people," says a fan. "He handles them like a diplomat."

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Raspberry Creme Brulée

Three parts Stoli Vanilla, one part Framboise. Shake, strain into a martini glass and garnish with a fresh strawberry.

Joanne Rodrigue ◎ The Palm

Mon., Tues., Thurs. and Fri. nights, Wed. days

Perky, pretty and personable, she's the Mary Tyler Moore of Boston bartenders. For five of her 14 years bartending, she worked in Las Vegas, including a gig at the MGM Grand, where she learned a lot about human nature. "I figured out how to read people instantly, because no one is from there, and they're generally there to gamble. I could tell right away whether they were winning or losing." Age 36 and currently studying graphic design, which she eventually plans to pursue professionally, she caters to the rich and powerful clientele at this meeting place of the high and mighty. "My regulars are all very successful people, but they're down-to-earth. They invite me to their homes, and I socialize with them." Approachable and light-hearted, she laughs everything off and admits to being "clumsy, but extremely fast." Despite an occasional spill and smashed glassware, she's considered aces among her regulars because, as one of them put it, "She makes me feel like the most important person in the world. I once brought a friend from out of town to her bar, and he left under the impression that I was the mayor." Also to her credit: Her bar is one of the few in the city where a single woman can feel comfortable coming alone.

SIGNATURE DRINK:

Italian Citrus Pop

Equal parts Absolut Citron, Stoli Orange and Tuaca (an Italian orange/vanilla liqueur). Shake and serve in a martini glass with a sugared rim. Garnish with an orange slice.

Hall of Fame

THESE BARTENDERS GARNER HEAPS OF PRAISE EVERY YEAR. NEW INDUCTEES (WITH BIOS) WERE CITED IN A PREVIOUS ISSUE BUT RECEIVED SIGNIFICANT ENOUGH VOTES AGAIN THIS YEAR TO WARRANT THE HALL.

Paula Blasko ◎ Michael Sherlock's

Most of her regulars—which are legion—followed her when she moved from Brandy Pete's to this financial district watering hole. Familiar and comfortable best describes her style; if the Cheers of TV really existed, she'd probably work there.

Gary Marcarelli ◎ the Julien bar at the Hotel Meridien

The epitome of the old-fashioned barkeep, he presides over the hushed atmosphere of this businessmen's hideaway in what was once the trustees' room in the former Federal Reserve Bank.

Cedric Adams ◎ Silvertone

A distinguished alumnus of West Street Grill, the Cactus Club, Road Trip, the Exchange and Les Zygomates, he's gone into the dry cleaning business but still keeps his hand in one night a week. "When everything sucks," says one fan, "you go see Cedric. It's that simple."

Michael Ross ◎ 575

Keeps the conversation flowing, as well as the drinks. When things get really slow, he's been known to perform magic tricks. Fans praise his extroverted personality, fashion sense, good looks, and—in the words of one—"an adorable butt."

Brad Barile ◎ Pignoli

An accomplished saxophonist, this career musician pays the bills by tending bar at this sophisticated Back Bay restaurant. The outrageously funny martini jockey could be a stand-up comic and has an uncanny sixth sense to notice when a glass is empty.

Carah McLaughlin ◎ Restaurant Zinc

With a bigger following than some cult leaders, this classic bartender has been lauded by Food and Wine magazine for her sidecar. Sitting at her bar is like attending a cocktail party hosted by an unusually gracious version of Dorothy Parker.

Lee Wolf ◎ Cambridge Brewing Company

As a freelance illustrator and the artist who created the mural at this Cambridge hotspot, he's an avid observer of human nature. The secret to his popularity however, is simple. "For my regulars I always have their drink on the bar before they sit down."

Annie Gauthier ◎ Vinny Testa's (Brookline)

Having traded a successful but frenetic career as a film and video producer for life behind the bar, she's an oasis of calm. No matter how busy she is, she immediately makes eye contact with arriving patrons, so they know she'll be with them as soon as she can.

David "Rico" Annechiarico ◎ Boston Beer Garden

A charmer, he's been known to present female customers with roses and has the gift of gab. "Some of my customers think I'm the funniest thing on the face of the earth. I don't know why; I don't know any jokes." Still, they keep coming back for more.

Tim Murphy ◎ Punch Bar

He doesn't smoke cigars, although he ministers expertly to the enthusiasts here. Able to carry on seven or eight conversations at a time, he says, "My true belief about bartending is that it has nothing to do with mixing drinks. It's about mixing people."

DOES MUSIC SOOTHE THE

BY PETER R. TERHUNE

The monster mash responds to everything from Nirvana to Tchaikovsky

SAVAGE YEAST?

Photographs By John Soares

It's not a widely held belief, but some brewers swear that yeast respond to music. And virtually all agree that music soothes the brewer's breast. Considering how carefully they choose their ingredients, it should surprise no one, then, that area brewers are downright picky when it comes to what they'll listen to when performing specific tasks around the brewhouse.

The first step in brewing is mashing, when brewers steep the malt in water to convert the grain's starch into sugar. Mashing is a high-energy, muscle-churning affair; most brewers echo Cambridge Brewing Co.'s Will Meyers when he says the task "deserves loud and energetic music." Cambridge's assistant brewer Lauren Durling adds "you need something with good rhythm." Durling's picks: James Brown, surf bands like the Ventures and the Shadows, and Me First and the Gimme Gimmees. She describes the latter as a guitar-fueled ensemble that performs punked-up versions of '70s staples like "Sweet Carolina," "Fire and Rain" and "Danny's Song." Pity poor Scott Hutchinson of Brew Moon's Cambridge site; his equipment is so loud that even the din of "Me First" and the Gimme Gimmees would be overwhelmed.

Across the river at the Back Bay Brewing Co., Tod Mott pursues the same mashing/music aesthetic, albeit with "raucous hardcore, ska and punk. I'll play everything from Nirvana to the Bosstones." At the North East Brewing Co., the mashing music depends on who is brewing. Heavy metal rules when assistant Aaron Hecker is in the house; head brewer Dann Paquette prefers '60s garage bands, the Pogues or celtic music. "We used to play a tape of a piper named Gordon Duncan when we brewed the MacFearsome Scotch Ale," Paquette says.

Boiling follows mashing, when the sugary liquid is boiled with hops to produce wort (pronounced wert). The boil can take up to two hours; music choice during this time varies greatly. At the Tremont Brewery "it tends to be mellow," says co-owner Chris Lohring. "Either country or classical, nothing too intense." Steve Lincoln at Waltham's Watch City Brewing Co. seconds that sentiment; Vivaldi and a CD of Duke Ellington with Louis Armstrong top Lincoln's "music to boil by" list. Riley Allen at the Fort Hill Brewhouse typically is the alone at this stage of the brew day; he takes advantage of Fort Hill's cavernous acoustics to play live albums or a personal favorite, "Yellow Shark" by Frank Zappa and the Ensemble Moderne. "At times it's really strange and thought provoking," he says. Tim Morse, director of brewing for the John Harvard's Brewhouse chain, notes that music plays a significant role in all his company's facilities. He says that lately his staff in Cambridge and Framingham have been taking inspiration from a CD by local heroes The Gravelpit (incidentally, Gravelpit's drummer Pete Caldes works at the Tremont Brewery).

The folks at the Harpoon Brewery tend toward up-tempo alterna-faves like Buffalo Tom and Bob Mould. Hands down, however, the top pick during the boil and indeed for almost any brewhouse task is the band Cowboy Mouth. "It's good upbeat music, especially at 6 am," offers head brewer Sean Cornelius. "Their song 'Jenny Says' has this repetitive lyric 'let it go' about 20 times in a row. That's good for emptying the mash tun." Lab work is one of the few situations where Cowboy Mouth isn't universally appropriate, says Harpoon vice president and director of brewery operations Al Marzi. "For that you need something structured and cerebral like classical. Beethoven has too many dynamics; I prefer Mozart." That is unless he's working with bacteria, says Marzi; then, only Tchaikovsky will do.

Following the boil the wort is chilled and pumped into a fermenter; yeast is added and fermentation begins. A small subset of brewers feel that music is critical at this juncture. He may not blare "Abraxas" while his yeast produces Samuel Adams Boston Lager, but Boston Beer Co. brewer Jim DeBoer swears in his homebrewing days he used to play Santana during the first few days of fermentation. Tremont's brewer Jeff Biegart is convinced that music can indeed improve yeast performance; ambient music, especially Brian Eno, is his top choice. "It helps the yeast become one with its environment," he notes. This phenomena may also affect the beers at Commonwealth, as brewer Jeff Charnick pursues a "music as aural wallpaper" aesthetic by constantly playing WZBC, WMBR or another of Boston's college radio stations.

Cleaning is one of the most important jobs in a brewery, not to mention the most tedious. According to Brian Allen of Boston Beer Works, "for the more repetitive jobs that don't require a lot of concentration, like filtering and cleaning kegs, we listen to a lot of reggae and ska by the English Beat and the Specials. There's an energy to the music; it vitalizes you to do the job." Watch City's Lincoln agrees with the vitalizing theory, adding, "anything that's loud is great for washing kegs. Aaron [Matecychuk, assistant brewer] prefers X; I like Fugazi."

A Luxurious Work-out doesn't have to be a contradiction.

If you live or work in Boston and love to work-out in luxury, the Sheraton Boston Hotel & Towers has an exceptional health club for you. Conveniently located at the Prudential Center, we feature an indoor heated pool, open air sun deck, jacuzzi, sauna, state-of-the-art equipment, water aerobics, professional instruction and personal training. Bottling and kegging are loud assembly-line operations; loud music tends to be the rule. At Tremont, bottling music runs from local guitar stranglers Quintaine Americana to German noise mavens Einsturzende Neubaten; the latter, stresses Tremont's Biegart, is "industrious music, not industrial music."

"On bottling days we typically bring in some hardcore rock and roll and alternative stuff like Green Day," says Lou Amorati, co-owner of Hudson's Pilgrim Brewery. "Whereas keg or bottle-filling can be monotonous or boring," says Cambridge's Meyers, "we vacillate between droning and ambiant stuff like old King Crimson or Brian Eno's album with David Bryne 'My Life In The Bush of Ghosts' and stuff that's mindless and fun like ACDC." Brett Pacheco of Concord Junction Brewing Co. diverges a bit; he recommends playing neo-hippies Blind Melon when setting up the bottling line. Pacheco's assistant brewer Paul Lavallee has seen music actually repair machinery. "He used to work at Casco Bay up in Portland where they had an Italian bottling line," says Pacheco. "When it wouldn't work they'd play Italian opera; Paul says that really helped."

Sadly, no brewer would go on record as saying that music actually influences their beer. Several, however, allowed as how they have strong beer/music associations. Pilgrim's Amorati, for example, will forever associate the Grateful Dead's song "Ripple" with brewing his company's first batch of Harvest Ale back in 1995. Cream's treatment of "Strange Brew" puts Boston Beer's Jim DeBoer in a beer-drinking frame of mind. "The Pogues and beer go together very well," volunteers North East's Dann Paquette. "Whenever I hear 'Dirty Old Town' it reminds me of getting drunk on the Cape and requesting that song, getting drunk in Boston and requesting that song," etc. The oddest association comes courtesy of Cambridge's Durling.

"For me, the John Denver song 'Country Roads' will always remind me of Oktoberfest in Munich," she says. "It's a very popular song with the German bands there. When they play it, you'll see 3,000 people from around the world singing along and waving their liter mugs back and forth."

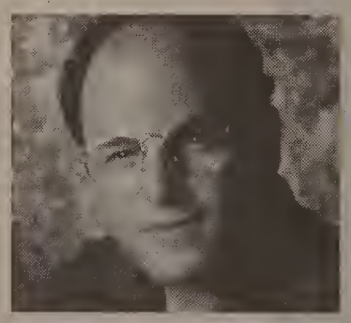
Agenda

BY SALVATORE TUZZEO



Improper choices for weeks of April 22 - May 5

Wednesday APRIL 22

Hug A Tree
Today is Earth Day so why not walk to work instead of driving that nasty gas-guzzler? How about planting a tree? Maybe even take all the cans and bottles to the recycling center? Or you could not do any of the above and keep destroying the planet we live on—one plastic bag at a time.

Thursday APRIL 23

Poetry
New York City performance poetry artist Nicole Blackman, gives a Stone Soup reading tonight at the Old West Church. Go listen and maybe even, learn? Tickets $5 at the door. 131 Cambridge Street, Government Center.

George, er, Jason Alexander.

Friday APRIL 24

Is That You Costanza?
Why yes it is. Jason Alexander of Seinfeld fame hosts the aptly titled An Evening With Jason Alexander. George, excuse me, Jason will perform an evening of both drama and musical theater at the Boston University Theatre. Tickets are $50-$75 and available by calling 266-0800.

Saturday APRIL 25

EarthFest
It's Saturday (maybe even sunny?) so what better a way to spend some free time then to go on over to the Hatch Shell and take a listen to some of the live tunes. Some of this years performers include: Paula Cole, Glenn Frey and up-and-coming star Chantal Kreviazuk.

Sunday APRIL 26

Uuuggghh!
As in Charlie Brown's favorite thing to say. Check out the first feature film from the Peanuts Gang, A Boy Named Charlie Brown, at the Coolidge Corner Movie Theater. 290 Harvard Street, Brookline.

Monday APRIL 27

Grease Lightning!
It's been 20 years since John Travolta and Olivia Newton-John danced around in Grease. Now's your chance to get see it again on the big screen, or, if you're my age, for the first time. See it now before it's too late.

Tuesday APRIL 28

Jerry
There's only one Jerry I'm talking about. Of the Garcia breed. House of Blues in Cambridge begins its weekly (it's about time someone around here did it) Deadhead night every Tuesday from 10 pm to I am. 96 Winthrop Street, Cambridge.

Wednesday APRIL 29

He's Just Plain Cool
Playing at the Brattle for Warner Bros. 75th Anniversary Festival of Film Classic, Rebel Without A Cause—starring the legendary James Dean—is screened tonight at 5:20 pm. 40 Brattle Street, Cambridge. 876-6837

Thursday APRIL 30

The Doctor Will See You Now
Actually it's you who should be seeing the doctor. Doctor Gecchee and the Blood Junkies that is. A play by Ed Bullins set amidst the "big city junk-dealing scene and the Hoodoo-laced swamps of the deep south" this production at the Peabody House Theater in Somerville is a sure bet. 277 Broadway, Somerville, 625-1300.

Friday MAY 1

Bound For Glory
Filled with rubber, latex, spandex, leather and probably whips and chains too, the models of the Eros Boutique will strut their stuff at the 7th Annual B&D Ball at Man Ray in Cambridge. Come see the show—just don't step outta line! Call the boutique for details, 425-0345.

Leather, lace and other goodies at the B&D Ball.

Saturday MAY 2

Champage Wishes
What would the wishes be, though, without the caviar dreams? At the Exchange Restaurant & Cafe you get both. During Russian Saturdays (running through May) chef Jam Navaraj melds the two into an evening for $50 per person—beginning at 6 pm and ending at 9 pm. 148 State Street. 726-7600

Sunday MAY 3

On The Seventh Day
You're suppose to rest today. How 'bout one better. Try going to the spa and using your day of relaxation to get a facial—or better yet—a full body massage.

Monday MAY 4

It's Monday
And there's usually not too much to do on Mondays—I know. But try your hand at Swing dancing at Johnny D's Uptown Lounge in Somerville and you might actually learn something. That's right, the band (Jumpcrew) stops in the middle of their set for a quick lesson on how to swing dance the right way. Shows start at 8 pm. 17 Holland Street. 776-2004.

Tuesday MAY 5

Where There's Smoke...
You know the rest. At Hibernia on Tuesday nights there's a different sort of Smoke. It's jazz night here so be a hipster, come down for the live jazz and cool atmosphere. 25 Kingston Street, 292-2333.

GEORGE WASHINGTON was well-known for his crossing of the Delaware. And upon one occasion, our threshold.

IT HAPPENED DURING THE AUTUMN OF 1789, while President Washington was visiting Boston. He called upon an old friend, Major Benjamin Frothingham, who lived in Charlestown. Later, the two stopped by Warren Tavern for drinks, making Washington one of our most famous patrons. Why not stop by yourself? And if you happen to know the President, by all means bring him along.

Get a dark bronzed tan in three sessions or less!

Introductory offer:
3 Turbo sessions only $69.

Come try our new Ultrasun Turbo! One tanning session is equal to 8–10 regular tanning sessions. Already dark? Get much darker in one session. Only 2–4 tanning sessions a month will maintain a deep dark bronzed tan. There is practically no burning ray. The bed stays open as you lie on a padded massaging mattress. Save time and money and reserve a session now!

"A carnivore's dream...
Boston's Best New Steakhouse."
—The Improper Bostonian Magazine

"Plaza III is Gourmet Greatness."
—The Phantom Gourmet

"The focus is on the quality of the steak, flown in daily...from their own meat company. Memories are made of beef like this. the savory notes hitting high in the palate. filling the mouth with texture and aroma."
—Alison Arnett, The Boston Globe

"A touch of class has come to Faneuil Hall Marketplace with the arrival of Plaza III...first class restaurants are hard to find here, especially a topnotch steak house."
—Gus Saunders, The Boston Herald 1/2

Let's Clear Up The Confusion

SOME FACTS ABOUT ACNE

- Chocolate does not cause acne.
- Suntanning does not clear up acne.
- Stress is an aggravator of acne.
- Cosmetics, even some synthetic oil-based and hypo-allergenic brands, will aggravate acne.

No one does what we do for ACNE
The fact is...we do it better than anyone else.

At Gentlepeople, you, our members, make the difference!

Zelda Fischer, consultant to the world's fussiest single people.

You are considerate, generous, intelligent, fun, romantic, successful

You are monogamous by nature

You're good to your parents

You love kids

You have a good sense of humor

You care about animals

You don't smoke or use drugs

You drink only in moderation

You want to be happily and permanently married

If you would like to meet excellent single men and women who share your values, your goals, your high standards, you belong with us, at Gentlepeople.

To meet with us call: 617-492-1200

NO GROBIANS, PLEASE

She's 31, so pretty, sweet, stylish, spiritual, and altogether adorable that every eligible young bachelor in Boston needs to know about her. She's asked me to do the screening for her because her best friend, another client of mine, is now engaged through my introduction and coaching. So if you're 30-45, with a preference for entrancing blondes, and feel you have a lot to offer, mainly integrity, character, kindness, and the desire for a wonderful, enduring relationship, don't delay, . call me now! Zelda Fischer, (617) 492-1200, FAX (617) 424-1941, or write 172 Newbury Street, Boston, MA 02116. We, at Gentlepeople, have been bringing together men and women of style and substance for nearly 20 years.

All of our clients want marriage, not casual relationships.

Film Capsules

BY BETSY SHERMAN

★ Don't Bother
★★ Fair
★★★ Good
★★★★ Terrific

The Big One ★★★
We know the drill from Michael Moore's Roger and Me and TV Nation: righteous muckraking with a sense of humor, and some sharp common-sense questions for corporate exploiters of people and the environment. Along with some pleasant hamminess on the part of the proudly unfashionable Moore. The Big One is Moore's joking suggestion for a better name for our country. The gadfly takes us along as he crosses the country on a book tour. In each city, he sniffs out a social injustice and confronts the perpetrator, either big business or government. It's an entertaining documentary about the absurdities and tragedies that persist as America tries to integrate its two fundamental systems, capitalism and democracy.

Junk Mail ★★
The opening passages of this Norwegian slice of lowlife promise an insolent black comedy. Our antihero is a nebbishy letter carrier with no life of his own, so he snoops into the lives of people on his route (for spite, he stashes mail in a train tunnel). When he makes a copy of an apartment key belonging to a young hearing-impaired woman, and makes himself at home at her place, we shudder about potential invasions of our own privacy. But then Junk Mail slips, as a damsel-in-distress plot kicks in and the movie gets more conventional with every step.

Sliding Doors ★
If you're hankering for a return to '80s gimmick comedies—like, say, Mannequin—you may be able to tolerate this disastrous romantic comedy in which Gwyneth Paltrow plays two versions of her character. Both speak with English accents (Emma goes Doublemint!). Gwyneth is a London PR exec fired from her job. She runs for a subway train and splits into two bodies: one makes the train, the other is left on the platform. Platform Gwyn stays in a rut with cheating boyfriend John Lynch and toils as a waitress. Train Gwyn meets nice, funny John Hannah and starts her own company. Writer-director Peter Howitt slaps cutesy humor onto a plodding lecture about empowerment. Paltrow is stiff. The scenes between Lynch and his other girlfriend Jeanne Tripplehorn are screechingly bad. The only enjoyment comes from Scottish actor Hannah, a charming object of pursuit.

In Sliding Doors Paltrow plays a double role.

Sonatine ★★★
Japanese actor-filmmaker Takeshi Kitano's offbeat 1993 gangster picture—released now through Quentin Tarantino's company Rolling Thunder—isn't as profound or moving as his recent cop movie Fireworks. But he's really onto something, remolding the genre for expressive purposes much the way Sergio Leone did for westerns. Kitano stars as a mid-level yakuza boss who has lost his taste for the life. He and his boys are sent to Okinawa to settle a dispute among gangs. Kitano reluctantly goes, even though he suspects it's a setup to get him off his prosperous turf. Plot is secondary to mood. An unexpected playfulness emerges as the tough guys cool their heels at a beach hideout (the mugs become the Monkees with guns). Kitano works in the realm of the irrational; it's as if subconscious fears suddenly materialize, wreak havoc, then are gone.

The Spanish Prisoner ★★★1/2
David Mamet directs a sublime companion piece to his House of Games—a tale of an ordinary person caught up in a con. Campbell Scott plays the scientist whose invention will make Ben Gazzara's company a lot of money, unless corporate spies get hold of it and sell it to a competitor. Steve Martin plays a blueblood who befriends up-and-comer Scott and offers big-brotherly advice. Rebecca Pigeon is a nosy company secretary. The extravagant facade of language and manners are important, as always in Mamet, but here he also exposes the American class system based on the sheen of money. Scott finds out he's more aware than he thought he was of the social pecking order. Martin, in a straight role, is quite good, but this movie's power comes from the complete veracity of Scott's performance. His character goes through the wringer in what can't really be called a cautionary tale, because you can't take precautions against such terror. Mamet is interested in testing the mettle of his protagonist.

Suicide Kings ★1/2
Softboiled pulp fiction about a group of post-preppy weenies who kidnap a mob boss hoping to exchange him for one boy's sister, who has been snatched for ransom. A modicum of oomph is provided by the never unwatchable Christopher Walken as the crafty don - and to some extent by Denis Leary as Walken's prowling henchman, though his sketch-like riffs aren't successfully integrated into the body of the story. The whiny youngsters include Jay Mohr, Henry Thomas and Johnyy Galecki. The film's Rat Pack Revival aesthetic and affectations feel strategized, not heartfelt. The plot's mystery aspects are pitiful. First-time feature director Peter O'Fallon better skeedaddle back to his cushy career helming for the boob tube.

Campbell Scott plays Joe Ross in The Spanish Prisoner.

MAMMA MARIA

It's no surprise people are still talking about Mamma Maria...

"Everything, and I mean everything, is great at this place for celebrating." Don't let the name deter you—this North End Italian is a serious restaurant with fabulous food, excellent wines, romantic decor, knowledgeable service and valet parking to boot."
1998 Zagat Survey

"Refined Northern Italian cooking reigns here." Sweet second-story view of balconied windows within strolling distance of Paul Revere's historic house.
Wendy Fox, Boston Globe/ Attache Magazine January 1998

"One of America's top tables." Second year in a row!
Gourmet Magazine October 1997

"The flavors are bold and enveloping. This restaurant has evolved over the years to one that rivals fine dining anywhere in the city."
Alison Arnett, Boston Globe Calendar, 1996

"Winner! Best Italian Restaurant"
Boston Magazine Reader's Poll, May 1995

"One of Boston's Best Restaurants, Period Mamma Maria has hit its stride, a non-cliche place where everything works graciously."
Bon Appetit, April 1994

Tastings

Feelin' Wine

The Vault Bistro & Wine Bar has, among other spectacular goodies, special dinners, tasting and general events centered around—what else—wine. Some of their many programs include Enoteca!, which is a special dinner with food and wines of Tuscany happening on May 6. Tickets to these events range anywhere from $30 to $75.

Toast of the Town

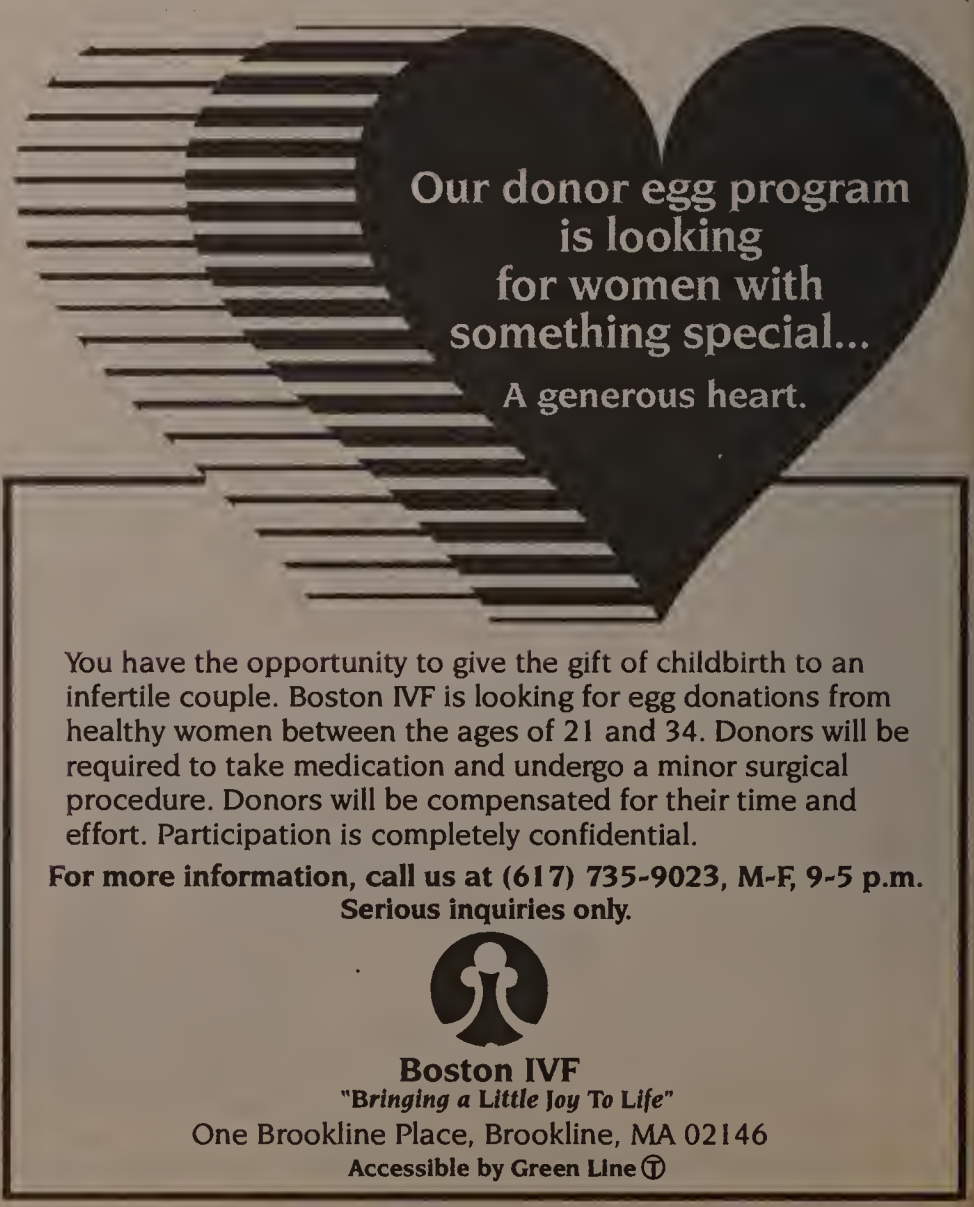
More than 50 of the city's best chef's will gather on April 23 at the Black Falcon Cruise Terminal and participate in the 11th Annual Taste of the Nation to benefit Share Our Strength, the nations leading anti-hunger organization. Participants will be able to peruse culinary delights by such restaurants as; Clio, Zinc and Olives. Call 1-800-955-TASTE for more information.

Surf and Turf

It's spring. And how would you know it? By seeing surf & turf specials pop across menus everywhere. At Turner Fisheries in Back Bay for instance chef David Filippetti's new spring menu offers enticing Fried Oysters with Beef Tabasco Spring Rolls, Grilled Filet of Beef with Scallops and the classic Filet of Beef and Lobster.

Snacks

Tanjore in Cambridge is the first restaurant in Boston to serve "nashtas," which means snacks. Served between meals or late-nite in India, the personal-sized portions can also be made into a meal just as you would at a Chinese dim sum. Some of the nashtas treats include Ragda Pettis (potato patties on a bed of white peas topped with tamarind), Dahi Bhalla (lentil dumplings with yogurt) and Reshmi Kabobs (a "pate" of chicken and herbs wrapped around a skewer and charcoal-grilled). Prices range from $4-8.



Tea and Tunes

Afternoon tea at the Bristol Lounge of the Four Seasons Hotel will get a little livelier this winter with the addition of the Harvard Krokodiles. Slug back tea (blow first) to the tunes of Harvard University's oldest a cappella singing group the first Saturday of every month from January through May and September through December from 3:30-4 pm.

Theater Food

To ensure that patrons of the theater arts don't interrupt performances with stomach growls, the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel offers a special prix fixe pre-theater dinner menu at the Oak Room. The spread features three courses, with a choice of appetizer, entree and homemade dessert. For $75 for two, the classic selection of entrees includes grilled favorites such as tenderloin of beef, New York strip, and fresh salmon and halibut steaks, daily from 5:30-6:30 pm.

Improper IMPERSONALS

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. That's why we have the Improper Impersonals, a column written by you, the reader. Send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And it's free! Pick up a pen and tell that babe on the T you like his butt by writing to Improper Impersonals, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, 75 Arlington Street, 9th Floor Boston, MA 02116, fax: (617) 859-1446 or e-mail us at editor@improper.com. If you can't handle TWO Ice beers, you shouldn't be drinking at all. From now on all you are allowed to drink is non-alcoholic crap beer. Good luck, sucker. I think all the people who read this will agree, right?
NORTON

Robert at West Street
Do you remember the disgruntled hurrumph? I hope you were able to conceal any evidence from your mother. I also wish I had given you my phone number along with the inscription! I don't have many regrets, but not arranging a way to contact you again was definitely one of them. I'd love to have another chance, and I'm certain I'd like the mornings a little better if I could wake up with you again. P.S. the picture isn't what you thought!
ALLISON

HOARSE GUY
I seem to fit your specs, though it could just be a coincidence. I don't remember you, but you've sparked my interest. And I have NO objection to a man that cooks. But how will I ever know...?
SEA SCALLOP GAL

In Your Eyes
It was a quiet Sunday afternoon at the Boston Athletic Club, I was there taking a tour of the facilities, you were on a piece of equipment. I can't tell you what you were wearing, I can't tell you what piece of equipment you were on, all I can tell you is our eyes met and you smiled and after that the rest of the tour is a blur. Me I was a rather tall gentleman wearing a tweed overcoat and a green sweat shirt, it there was some moment shared would love to meet to discuss the possibilities. For some reason Peter Gabriel's song "In Your Eyes" keeps running through my mind. My email address is HTCRKCATCO@AOL.COM
TWEED

Gorgeous woman whose first name starts with V.
We met on Boylston Street when you asked me to help you find Healthworks. On the way there, we talked my favorite band and how it usually makes noise instead of music. I was too shy to ask you out, but I said maybe we'd see each other around. You smiled and said you'd like that. Now I've lost you in a sea of faces. Where are you? Contact were-are-you@goddamn.com to let me know.
SWIMMING

DEAR DEBBIE
I met you, although injured, at Jose MacEntyres. You seem like one of the few who are both beautiful without being pretentious. I tried twice to get to talk with you but your friends dragged you away. (My big friend really is a movie talent agent) I would like to meet you for coffee sometime. E-Mail me at <cro02036@acad.suffolf.edu>
Hope to speak with you soon,
CHRIS

Shep
I see you all the time on Federal, on your lovely orange bike. Thanks for finally saying hi—it was nice to actually meet you. I'm sure I'll see you around. BTW, what do you do after work?
COMMUTER GIRL

In line at Star Market
It was Tuesday, March 24 at appox. 7 pm. You were wearing all black, had shoulder length hair and beautiful blue eyes. We were both standing side by side in the checkout line and I made a comment, "This feels like slow motion." You replied, "More like no motion." You were beautiful and I couldn't keep my eyes off you, even after you looked back and smiled. We have to meet because I haven't stopped thinking about you since.
HOPE TO SEE YOU

Dear Improper Impersonal Readers
Here's some advice: When you see someone you like—talk to them. Generally, if the other person is interested they will converse with you. I, for one, am sick of reading your pathetic stories of "how your eyes met; smiled at each other; laughed in unison, etc." Because you know what? The other person never sees them and we're all left reading your slop.
VITRIOL FOR ALL

Dear Vitriol for All
I saw you on the corner of Mass Ave. and Boylston. Our eyes met. You smiled at me and I was drowning in a sea of bliss. Then a car hit you. I said, "Ouch!" out loud. Very out loud. So out loud that someone who cared you'd been hit called the ambulance. The ambulance came quickly, well quickly isn't really the word...the ambulance came in a short while. That's better. You were passed out cold with an Improper Impersonal in your hand and in your pockets were; a five-dollar bill, three ancient Mayan coins, a tube of KY jelly, a cricket, another cricket (quite possibly the "other half" of some cricket marriage), a package of #11 ball-bearings, two skin-mags, a glass of milk, a pack of Pall Malls and hanging around your neck, a severed human hand. I poured the milk on your head, stepped on the crickets, spent the coins on a Barry Manilow song in a jukebox, threw sand into the ball-bearing package, squeezed out all the KY, (okay, I took it with the skin mags!) smoked all the cigarettes one after the other blowing the secondhand smoke In your passed out face and smacked you around with the hand

Aldara™ (IMIQUIMOD) Cream, 5%

Brief Summary—Consult package insert for full prescribing information.

DESCRIPTION

Aldara ™ is the brand name for imiquimod which is an immune response modifier. Each gram of the 5% cream contains 50 mg of imiquimod in an off-white oil-in-water vanishing cream base.

INDICATIONS AND USAGE

Aldara 5% cream is indicated for the treatment of external genital and perianal warts/condyloma acuminata in adults.

CONTRAINDICATIONS

None known

WARNINGS

Aldara cream has not been evaluated for the treatment of urethral, intra-vaginal, cervical, rectal, or intra-anal human papilloma viral disease and is not recommended for these conditions.

PRECAUTIONS

General

Local skin reactions such as erythema, erosion, excoriation/flaking, and edema are common. Should severe local skin reaction occur, the cream should be removed by washing the treatment area with mild soap and water. Treatment with Aldara cream can be resumed after the skin reaction has subsided. There is no clinical experience with Aldara cream therapy immediately following the treatment of genital/perianal warts with other cutaneously applied drugs; therefore, Aldara cream administration is not recommended until genital/perianal tissue is healed from any previous drug or surgical treatment. Aldara has the potential to exacerbate inflammatory conditions of the skin.

Information for Patients

Patients using Aldara 5% cream should receive the following information and instructions. The effect of Aldara 5% cream on the transmission of genital/perianal warts is unknown. Aldara 5% cream may weaken condoms and vaginal diaphragms. Therefore, concurrent use is not recommended.

1. This medication is to be used as directed by a physician. It is for external use only. Eye contact should be avoided.
2. The treatment area should not be bandaged or otherwise covered or wrapped as to be occlusive.
3. Sexual (genital, anal, oral) contact should be avoided while the cream is on the skin.
4. It is recommended that 6-10 hours following Aldara 5% cream application the treatment area be washed with mild soap and water.
5. It is common for patients to experience local skin reactions such as erythema, erosion, excoriation/flaking, and edema at the site of application or surrounding areas. Most skin reactions are mild to moderate. Severe skin reactions can occur and should be reported promptly to the prescribing physician.
6. Uncircumcised males treating warts under the foreskin should retract the foreskin and clean the area daily.
7. Patients should be aware that new warts may develop during therapy, as Aldara is not a cure.

Carcinogenicity, Mutagenesis, and Impairment of Fertility

Rodent carcinogenicity data are not available. Imiquimod was without effect in a series of eight different mutagenicity assays including Ames, mouse lymphoma, CHO chromosome aberration, human lymphocyte chromosome aberration, SHE cell transformation, rat and hamster bone marrow cytogenetics, and mouse dominant lethal test. Daily oral administration of imiquimod to rats, at doses up to 8 times the recommended human dose on a mg/m^2 basis throughout mating, gestation, parturition and lactation, demonstrated no impairment of reproduction.

Pregnancy

Pregnancy Category B. There are no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Imiquimod was not found to be teratogenic in rat or rabbit teratology studies. In rats at a high maternally toxic dose (28 times human dose on a mg/m^2 basis), reduced pup weights and delayed ossification were observed. In developmental studies with offspring of pregnant rats treated with imiquimod (8 times human dose), no adverse effects were demonstrated.

Nursing Mothers

It is not known whether topically applied imiquimod is excreted in breast milk.

Pediatric Use

Safety and efficacy in patients below the age of 18 years have not been established.

ADVERSE REACTIONS

In controlled clinical trials, the most frequently reported adverse reactions were those of local skin and application site reactions; some patients also reported systemic reactions. These reactions were usually mild to moderate in intensity; however, severe reactions were reported with 3X/week application. These reactions were more frequent and more intense with daily application than with 3X/week application. Overall, in the 3X/week application clinical studies, 1.2% (4/327) of the patients discontinued due to local skin/application site reactions. The incidence and severity of local skin reactions during controlled clinical trials are shown in the following table.

Remote site skin reactions were also reported in female and male patients treated 3X/week with imiquimod 5% cream. The severe remote site skin reactions reported for females were erythema (3%), ulceration (2%), and edema (1%); and for males, erosion (2%), and erythema, edema, induration, and excoriation/flaking (each 1%).

Adverse events judged to be probably or possibly related to Aldara reported by more than 5% of patients are listed below; also included are soreness, influenza-like symptoms and myalgia.

Incidences reported without regard to causality with Aldara

Adverse events judged to be possibly or probably related to Aldara and reported by more than 1% of patients include: Application Site Disorders: Wart Site Reactions (burning, hypopigmentation, irritation, itching, pain, rash, sensitivity, soreness, stinging, tenderness); Remote Site Reactions (bleeding, burning, itching, pain, tenderness, tinea cruris); Body as a Whole: fatigue, fever, influenza-like symptoms; Central and Peripheral Nervous System Disorders: headache; Gastro-Intestinal System Disorders: diarrhea; Musculo-Skeletal System Disorders: myalgia.

OVERDOSAGE

Overdosage of Aldara 5% cream is unlikely due to minimal percutaneous absorption. However, persistent topical overdosing of Aldara 5% cream could result in severe local skin reactions. Hypotension was reported following multiple oral doses of >200 mg of imiquimod and was resolved following oral or intravenous fluid administration.

DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION

Aldara cream is to be applied 3 times per week, prior to normal sleeping hours, and left on the skin for 6-10 hours.

Hiding from genital warts won't make them go away.

You can put an end to the warts— and the worry—with ALDARA cream.

ALDARA is a prescription cream both men and women can use at home to treat external genital warts. Just see your doctor for a diagnosis and a prescription, and ALDARA cream can get rid of the warts—so you can stop worrying.

Most common side effects are redness, peeling, and itching where ALDARA cream is applied, which may be caused by the body's immune response to the drug.

ALDARA cream treats external genital warts but is not a cure. The effect of ALDARA cream on the spread of genital warts to partners is unknown. ALDARA cream may weaken condoms and diaphragms when applied before sexual contact.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Stay sane and somewhat focused. Don't let the stars get in your eyes and blind you to the dangers (and strange people) you're attracting because your Mars ruler is approaching unpredictable Uranus. Although the challenging square between these planets isn't exact until Wednesday, Mars, like Rams, can't help but eagerly and then act prematurely. Since the Taurus new moon this weekend falls in some Arians' money house, it makes sense (now, there's a novel approach) to spend time visualizing material goodies coming to you sooner rather than later.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Whatever form the goodness and mercy being shown you takes, take as much of it as you can. As a rule, your Venus ruler meets generous Jupiter only once a year, so you might not have this much good luck for quite a while. Pisces people are likely to be the instruments the gods are using to reward your artistic efforts; if a Fish swims your way, listen to what it has to say before you ask for more. The new moon in your sign is another indication that you are intrinsically worthy and deserve a sizable reward. Happy Birthday. Live long and prosper.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

You've got to be patient, or as patient as a Gemini can be. Even though your Mercury ruler is finally moving forward, it hasn't built up any discernible speed or power as yet. Maybe you'll notice something happening after Mercury sextiles inventive Uranus on Tuesday and maybe you won't. You could be distracted by a magnanimous benefactress (Venus and Jupiter in watery Pisces in your midheaven) showering you with opportunities to advance your career or social position. Perhaps your artistic or spiritual gift is being recognized as well. Whatever.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

The new moon in early Taurus may provide another career jump start, but this one won't come with as much pressure or anxiety as the one last month. Taurus and Cancer are easy on each other, so the new element added to your gig should fit right into your current modus operandi. You're also receiving benefits from the fortunate Venus-Jupiter conjunction in Pisces, another sign moon children can relate to without encountering much friction. However, your partner could be under attack midweek; tell him or her to yell at you instead of the boss or the Fates.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

A Lion, no matter where it sleeps, always feels the earth move and the winds shift. After the new moon on Sunday, you'll sense something new is happening family—or careerwise for your immediate group. Unfortunately, aggressive Mars at the top of your Taurus midheaven could be attacking the friendly relationship you're currently enjoying with a business partner or ex-spouse. If a co-worker warns you that a temper tantrum or headstrong action is about to cause trouble, take cover and give thanks for "female intuition."

VIRGO

AUGUST 23 SEPTEMBER 22

Don't be shy. Go ahead and avail yourself of the benefits your mate and partners are enjoying. There's more than enough goodies to go around, and more gentleness and good will than you're apt to encounter for a while. If you're in litigation, you could receive a generous settlement while Venus and Jupiter (rulers of lawyers and the justice system) transit your house of significant others. The earthy Taurus new moon on Sunday can bring new business investments, particularly in real estate and horticulture. Sow your precious seeds.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Artisans and folks in the service sector, including health professionals, should be in better financial shape while your Venus ruler is benefiting from its close contact with growth-oriented Jupiter. If you're thinking of expanding your practice, this would be a good time. You would also be quite content to count your blessings and your profits. Further disruptions in your home life can be more destructive than you expected, but this isn't the conclusion to a long-standing situation, just another flare-up.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

The Taurus new moon provides an opportunity to begin a new phase of your partnership or to write a new chapter at work. Think about what you want and what would be best; they are not necessarily the same thing. Take care that you don't lose your temper and see red, so to speak, when your Mars co-ruler in the sign of the headstrong Bull runs up against rebellious Uranus midweek. This can create a conflict with neighbors or a sibling, spontaneous combustion (an electrical fire or failure) and an inexplicable desire to be contrary, like Mistress Mary.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

That "best of everything" Venus-Jupiter combo is raising your spirits and your expectations; pray that it doesn't raise the cost of home improvements or house payments. You're in no mood to constrain yourself, to compromise with quality or even to consider the money you could save. This tendency to express yourself in as unique and outrageous a manner as possible can peak on Wednesday in a slew of gadgets and hi-tech gambles. Be careful, your enthusiasm and eagerness may blow up in your face.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Let the earthy energy of the Taurus new moon on Sunday calm you down and give you practical, sensible things to do about the house, within the family circle. And use the "not much happening" moon-voids on Saturday, Monday and next Wednesday to keep a lid on what could turn out to be an explosive situation. Midweek, as fiery Mars squares electronic Uranus, you may be knee deep in repairmen, screaming at your computer or simply crazed for no apparent reason except for planetary weirdness putting you on edge.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Something is coming to a head. You may feel that a new beginning at the new moon will change your environment for the better, but you'll still have to contend with abrasive Mars taking pot shots at your Uranus ruler. This warrior aspect peaks next Wednesday night, however its disruptive action may start as early as Monday. If you realize that you're being prodded to make a change, to act tough with neighbors and siblings, you should be able to smooth out the rougher spots diplomatically, but not until next weekend.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Hardly anything changes this week; you're still being blessed (ho-hum) by the fortunate, even euphoric Venus-Jupiter link-up in your sign. And you're still somewhat susceptible to the strangeness of strangers, perhaps to an old acquaintance who has designs on your balance sheet. This situation can erupt midweek if you feel that you're under siege or are being set up. If you're playing politics, be sure that your contribution (time, energy, money) is precisely what you intended. No electronic transfers.

MUSIC TO OUR EARS

Barry Manilow might write the songs that make the young girls cry (they certainly make the rest of us cringe), but Songs of Love writes the songs that make sick kids smile. An organization of composers, musicians and industry insiders, the group creates customized tunes for children with terminal illnesses, and they recently hosted a black tie gala at the Copley Plaza Hotel, where a heavily Back Bay and Beacon Hill contingent gathered to dance, drink and otherwise while the night away.

Spotted among the throng: songwriter and daughter-of-Neil, Dara Sedaka, 007 doppelganger Alan Giles, one-third of the Robert triplets, Jean (whose family owns Maison Robert) and his stunning spouse, Laird Elting, distinguished shrink Sam Kelley, perpetual party boy David Chick, the unfortunately named Charlie Brown, up-and-coming screenwriter Liz Joyce, extroverted entepreneur Alec Stern, West Street proprietor Nelse Clark, pizza mogul Ken Nacar, Globe reporter Ellen O'Brien, movie producer Ari Newman, brunette bombshell Kelly Bowen, David Ho (no known relation to Don) and a producer from the Today Show who brought along a camera crew to film the party for an upcoming segment about the charity.

All in all, it was a delightful evening, and it raised some serious cash for a worthy cause. Now if someone could just start an organization to stop the Spice Girls from recording any more songs.

CONSPICUOUS CONSUMPTION

Donna Karan was there. So were Giorgio Armani, Calvin Klein and Valentino. Well, sort of.

An Evening with the Stars—a benefit for the Crohn's and Colitis Foundation—could more aptly be called An Evening of Wearing the Numbers Off Your Credit Cards. It began with cocktails and a buffet at Dakota's, followed by a three and a half hour shopping spree at Filene's Basement, where tantalizing designer bargains competed with dessert, coffee and the opportuntity to actually socialize with the other guests, who tended to say things like, "Nice to see you. Does this jacket fit me?"

Among those seen shopping 'til they dropped were such dazzling fixtures on the social scene as Ted and Joan Benard-Cutler with son Joel and daughter-in-law Randi, fellow Newtonians Jonathan and Linda Norris, the suspiciously tanned David Fialkow (he insists it's the convertible) with his stunning spouse, Nina, Parisian fashion plate Anna Kozol and her lawyer-husband, David, theatrical impresario Jon Platt, peripatetic party couple Andrew and Jessica Gosman, political factotum Joe Malone, Cuban cut-up Juan Prieto, Frenchman-about-town Francois de Costerd and stunning blonde stockbroker Caroline Coco, who found a dress she could wear the following night, at the Literary Lights benefit for the library.

Aside from catching a heady retail high, the party offered the unique opportunity to spot pillars of society standing in their skivvies in the dressing rooms, where the following exchange was overheard:

"Wait a minute—I want to say hello to your wife."

"Okay, but put your pants on first."

A WAY WITH WORDS

Like moths to the proverbial flame, Brahmins, bigwigs and bibliophiles flocked to the tenth annual Literary Lights Dinner to benefit the Associates of the Boston Public Library.

Held in the Park Plaza ballroom, the evening honored 17 local authors, including kitchen deity Julia Child, Babar creator Laurent de Brunhoff, Brookline-based mystery scribbler Linda Barnes, Harvard professor Orlando Patterson, NY Times scion Arthur Golden (who wrote Memoirs of a Geisha), children's book factory Marc Brown (whose Arthur character is a favorite among the mouth-breathing, runny-nosed set), Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Louise Gluck and National Book Award winners James Carroll and Robert Stone.

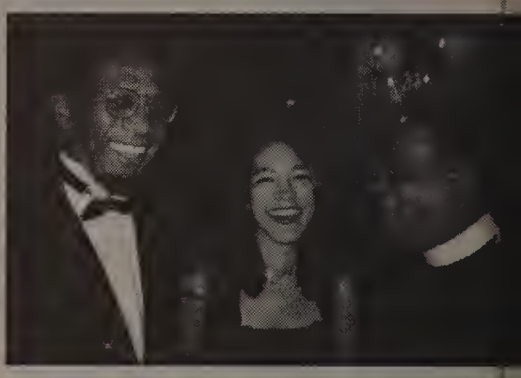
Prominent among the gliterati who were there to congratulate the literati were the evening's co-chairs—Molly Booth, Kathleen Capra and Sally Fay Cottingham—the bejewelled Lorraine Torti of Cartier (who donated the fountain pens that were presented to each honoree), art supply mogul Lionel Spiro, whose wife, Vivian, will take over John Sedgwick's position as head of the Associates next year, art dealers Michael and Karen Rotenberg, physician and author Paul Buttenweiser, stockbroker-to-the-stars John Spooner, restaurateur and socialite Debbie Lewis, and the stunning blonde Caroline Coco, wearing the dress she'd bought the night before at the CCFA event.

After cocktails and schmoozing with the honorees, guests sat down to dinner at tables decorated with the authors' books, which were up for grabs and disappeared quickly. Not surprisingly, much of the conversation revolved around books, but lest it seem that the entire evening was devoted to high-minded literary discussion, the following comment was overheard, after a well known man-about-town accidentally collided with a soon-to-be-divorced woman:



"Sorry to bang you...but that's always been an ambition of mine." ✦

LETTERS

Hot For The Teacher

I recently read the April 8 edition of your magazine. Especially the article about the 10 toughest people in Boston. I particularly enjoyed the mention of Elaine Kwon, the classical pianist and teacher. Elaine is one of my professors at Bridgewater State College. I just thought that I would tell you a little about my professor. She is not the normal teacher that you would think would teach a piano class. She threatens us with push-ups if we misname certain notes, lets us beat the hell out of a punching bag to relieve stress before a major exam, and she is the only teacher I know that tells us she had a "rough" weekend. Of course we all know what she means! The class can get a little out of hand, but she knows how to handle a bunch of pathetic pianists who think that they are the next greatest gift to classical piano. All in all, she is a great teacher no matter what she does. As you can tell by her photograph, she makes going to class a privilege rather than a chore. Even though she seems like an "Asian Flower," I would not want to run into her in a dark alley!

Sincerely,
Your budding piano stars
ZACH AND JOSH
Bridgewater

No Kwon Do

I've been reading your magazine over the last several years and I just wanted to say I like your new writer, Salvatore Tuzzeo. I especially like that "Tough Enough" article. I've studied both karate and piano and would be the perfect match for that Elaine Kwon. Is she available?

STEPHEN HART
Dorchester

Ed. note: Alas gentleman. Elaine Kwon is married. Although THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN thanks you for such attention paid to the article and, more specifically, Elaine Kwon, we ask that you all discontinue asking to meet, marry or date Ms. Kwon.

Furrocious!

Regarding your "Southie Goes To Hollywood" article (April 8, 1998), I was shocked Suffolk County Sheriff Richie Rouse's wife would wear fox. He's an intelligent, well educated man who is very aware of what is going on I the world. Maybe it's fake fur?

M. SHARPE
Boston

So It Didn't Rhyme...

I love reading your magazine and thus was greatly taken aback and confused by Peter R. Terhune's recent article headlined Does Music Soothe the Savage Yeast?(April 22) The confusion resulted from the article's first sentence—it read, "And virtually all agree that music soothes the brewer's breast." So which is it, beast, breast or yeast that music soothes?

Grammatically yours,
PAUL DOBRZE
Somerville

Ed. note: The expression "soothe a savage breast," derived from a 17th century William Congreve work, is often misstated as "beast." We took a little liberty by using the correct phrase in the article, but penning a headline that evoked the common (although wrong) usage, thereby making a thorough muddle.

Cabaret Forever

I simply wanted to thank you for mentioning cabaret in the last issue (Mopsy, April 8). There is a resurgence of this intimate musical experience in the Greater Boston area. As a member of the Boston Association of Cabaret Artists (100 strong!), as someone who watches over the Cabaret Connection series at Cambridge Center for Adult Education and as a performer myself, I am grateful for any mention of cabaret in the media.

WILL MCMILLAN
Cambridge

Homage, Mon Amour

As usual, Jonathan Soroff did a fabulous job on the beloved Best Bartenders issue. I just thought I'd drop a quick line to tell you what a great service an article like this is for Bostonians. I've been in my fair share of bars and clubs and a bartender, waiter or any service professional who takes the meaning of the job to a new level deserves to be commended once in a while. What better a way to do that than Soroff's homage to the greatest.

NATALIE J. CREP
Brookline

A Pat On The Back

Just want to say kudos to Jonathan Soroff for doing a great job on the bartender article. Soroff seems to show each one in a highly personal way—as if he knows each one personally. And, although I know he is a pretty popular person around Boston, I couldn't see him knowing every one. It's just that his descriptions on each individual one seem so right on. I guess we can chalk this up to the fact that he is a good journalist and great writer.

TODD JILK
Somerville

FAMILIARTY BREEDS

If this postcard promo for Les Zygomates restaurant looks familiar, it's supposed to. It's a takeoff on last summer's Boston magazine cover featuring the Mr. Clean-clad, barefoot Seth Greenberg of Mistral and attendant beauties. The spoof was the brainchild of Les Zygomates' Bethany Van Delft, who's on the left in the photo, with chef Ian Just, co-owner Lorenzo Savona and hostess Elena Jaza.

THE LAST BOOK

Those snacky kids over at the MIT Media Lab are at it again. They're elevating the power of the printed word by making books extinct. Duh?

Professor Joseph Jacobson, backed by business groups called Things That Think and News in the Future, is working to develop an "electronic ink" that would create words on a page, when called up by the reader from the "book"'s electronic memory. The thing would look kind of like a book (or videocassette), you could take it to bed with you and you could pick your reading material from a shelf the size of, say, the Library of Congress. The cost would be about $1,000 for access to every book ever printed. A prototype might be out in about five years. Or so we read.

STANDING TALL

Tower Records, legendary architect Frank Gehry's monument in Boston, is soon to be matched by another Gehry edifice, across the river. A multi million dollar building, designed by the eminent Gehry, is set to be constructed on Vassar Street to replace the MIT "plywood palace" now there. Considered a shrine of science, the "palace" is where radar was invented in the 1940s. It was also where Amar Bose reinvented the speaker, Noam Chomsky created modern linguistics, Harold Edgerton performed stop-action photography and Jerome Lettvin pioneered brain research. The palace will be torn down this summer.

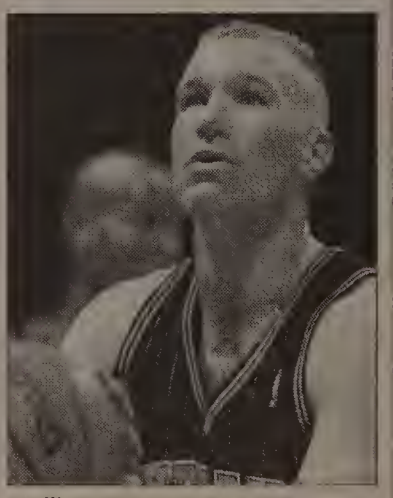
FILE UNDER HERE'S WHY BUSINESSMEN TURNED CANDIDATE DON'T WIN

Following the fine tradition of Ray Shamie, John Lakian, Mitt Romney and Jim Rappaport, businessman John O'Connor, a Democrat running for Joe Kennedy's Congress seat, won't win. At least that's what he thinks. In fact he seemed quite confident of the fact when he told rival candidate Marjorie Clapprood that he was sure she would win. But, he told her, he was also convinced he would win "the silver medal"—second place—an accomplishment O'Connor, who is married to philanthropist Carolyn Mugar, said he'd be more than happy with. "Nothing like planning to spend a million and a half bucks to come in second," said one wag.



PINING FOR NO MORE

Friends of Lois Pines, the state senator running for attorney general, were more than happy to shell out $500 a ticket to hear James Taylor at a fundraiser for Pines this week, once they were absolutely sure she would not chime in. Seems Pines was such a smash when she formed an impromptu performance trio on the Cape last summer with pals Alan Dershowitz and Livingston Taylor, she unfortunately was encouraged to go solo in a hapless version of "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" at the pols' St. Patrick's Day breakfast.

Pines, Livingston Taylor, Dershowitz

Luckily, she can count on the pros. In fact, with this concert, Liv, Kate and James Taylor, plus ex-wife Carly Simon, will all have performed to help Pines, who worked with and was very close friends with a Taylor relative in the 1980s.

Mullin

HEAVENLY HOST

Brent Kaufman of trendy Ciao Bella on Newbury Street thought it was a joke when he got a call from a local concierge saying Chris Mullin, star of the Indiana Pacers, who were in town to play the Celtics, wanted dinner reservations for himself and four nuns. Kaufman says he expected Mullin to walk in with four models. But nooooo. They were nuns. All four. One of whom was a cousin of Mullin's; the rest her guests.

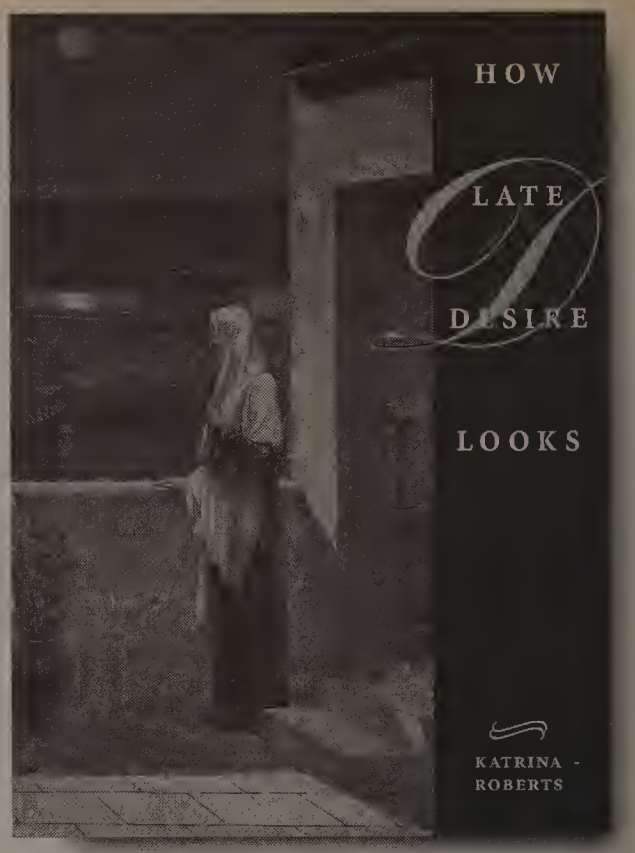
Renee inspires through thought, word and seed.



Eat Her Words

Renee's Garden offers fancy seeds. To find the name of a local garden center that sells them, or to get your store to stock Renee's seeds, call toll-free: 888-880-7228.

RENEE SHEPHERD, ONCE OF WHITE FLOWER FARM, and then Shepherd's Garden Seeds, sleuths out unusual, fancy, often antique vegetable and flower and herb seeds, and sells them in their own pretty packets bedecked with rather Beatrix Potter-like watercolor pictures. There are 60 varieties with as many more on the way. That means such mouthwatering flowers as Cinnamon Sunflower: "Bring armfuls of these deep-hued beauties indoors," advises Renee. And, in thought, word and seed she makes you long to plant her Tricolor Pole Beans, which come, charmingly, in green, yellow and purple, calling them "Sentinels of the abundant summer garden." This bosomy gardening language does it for Tricolor Cherry Tomatoes too: "Garden Candy," she calls it. They consist of "luscious orange Sungold, bright yellow Sweet Gold, and Rich Red Sweetie." Temptingly-named Empress Of India Nasturtiums are an one of the "antique" varieties she has dug up. Hard to resist a plant she describes as producing "big trusses of bloom." Mesclun, now semi-standard at the grocery store, is an adventure to grow; you plant the seeds, then when the miniature darlings reach five inches, you decapitate them, and let them grow back two, even three times. Renee offers top germating, reliable seeds lots, usually reserved for discriminating growers.

The Colors Of Poetry

Poet Katrina Roberts won the Peregrine Smith Poetry Contest, entitling her to have a book published. Hers is How Late Desire Looks.

The poems of Roberts, who lives in Cambridge, draw you into whispering private places.

THOUGH PEOPLE OFTEN EXPRESS FEAR OR IGNORANCE OF poetry, Katrina Roberts maintains that it is "crucial on a human, heart level" and that its particular power occurs in "leaps and transitions and juxtapositions" not unlike those in the familiar worlds of dreams and movies. Here, in her first book of collected poems, she delivers images of rich, inviting density that come with a kind of rinsed clarity. Each poem draws you into a whispering private place where you seem to have come upon Roberts talking to herself, elegantly worrying some preoccupation full of elliptical shorthand, and found yourself swept into the rhythm and private idiom. Miniature scenes described in an interior voice where things happen obliquely and where briefly-appearing characters have a resonating presence recall, at times, the quirky drifts of T.S. Eliot. Roberts, who lives in Cambridge and has written for THE IMPROPER, gives us two poems in that exacting verse form, the Sestina, which is mathematically organized to present certain words, or slight variations of them, in a propulsive intensity of repetition and surprise. This is a poet who loves odd, off-the-map words that make us slow down and take notice. Words like nicotiana, scutcheon, pavonine, skive, beryl, incarnadine, cucurvit, albuminous. And she richly describes objects: origami, sea glass, pills. Though nature is only a small part of her territory, she also writes that appealingly: "A field falls at our feet, a silk handkerchief. We think it lies still, but in wind like this, the wheat undulates endlessly." Roberts' poetry is subtle and complex; it skids around unexpected corners.

If You Can Stand The Heat

The whole enchilada can be made using equipment that covers a vast range of cookery needs. At Kitchen Etc. in the Fresh Pond Mall in Cambridge.

UNLIKE AN ACTUAL KITCHEN, THE STORE KITCHEN ETC. IS MARVELOUSLY SPACIOUS. THAT LAND-OF-COOKING-opportunity feeling so much equipment brings on fills you with culinary ambition for pizzas yet to bake and stirs yet to fry. The really fancy stuff like enameled cast-iron cookware by Le Creuset makes you feel French just looking at it. The huge array of black anodized, mostly large Calphalon pieces, sophisticated, beautiful, evenly-cooking cookware marks this chain store as Le Class Joint. Look at the prices, please—a skillet down from $147 to $89 99, so it's a discount store selling things for up to 40 percent off. Also, there are homey old friends such as oven-to-table bakeware from Corning (now you can also get a little Pot Luck keep-warm zip-up bag) and yesterday's now-standard New Thing-fondue makers, crockpots, etc. Also very top-of-the-line are the Henckles and the Wusthoff cutlery sets, all divided up according to slicing function, professional chef style. Gadgety equipment necessary for forays into Adventure Cooking—pizza stones, pasta machines, clay roasters—are here in force. Kitchen Etc. also has a bridal registry, and sells Lenox, Dansk and Royal Doulton bone china, along with well known brands of flatware.

The cookware at Kitchen Etc. imbues culinary ambition.

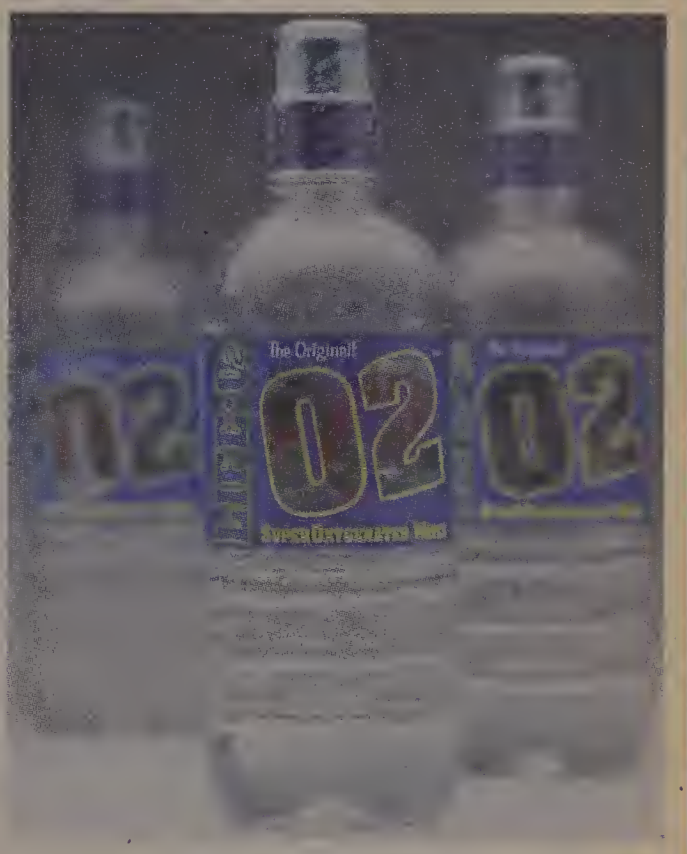
Boston's under-age drinking set (the 18 to 21 college crowd mostly) will have yet more forces to reckon with before they get that Bud Lite into their hands. Under the Mayor Menino's five point plan to crack down on under-age drinkers, a new regulation—C6—came into effect earlier this month, which dictates that at 18-plus events—like concerts and dance parties—the sale of liquor to those "of age" must be relegated to a very restricted area—making mingling (or dancing) between, let's say, a 20 year old and a 22 year old non-existent. Those permitted to drink that gin and tonic cannot leave the specified area and those not permitted to indulge won't even be able to get near the bar.



Behind Closed Doors

Here's the scoop on New Englanders' bathroom behavior:

- Bostonians average 5.8 trips to the bathroom each day as opposed to Portland, Maine, where the number is 7.2 trips a day.
- Men are primarily toilet tissue "folders" as opposed to "scrunchers" or "spinners," who are primarily women.
- On average, we use one roll of toilet tissue per week.
- We flush the equivalent of one mature tree down the toilet each year.
- 61 percent of New Englanders say they use toilet paper to blow their nose. 24 percent use toilet paper to wipe counters and mirrors and 23 percent use it to remove makeup—including 6 percent of male respondents to the survey.
- New Englanders between ages 22-34 spend 10 minutes more in the bathroom each day. Which begs the question, Is the water running during those 10 minutes?

Breathe Deep

Forget the caffeinated water craze. The chuggable product du jour is Life O2, a super-oxygenated water that puts the O back in H20. Created by two Hungarian doctors and tested on that country's Olympic Team in the '80s, the product is patently infused with seven times the oxygen of ordinary water. In tests, 5K runners' times were decreased by an average of 31 seconds. First introduced during Boston Marathon weekend, Life O2 is available by calling 1-800-441-1792.

Adam Berke is already planning to feature the water, along with a full-service oxygen bar, at his namesake's gym. Oxygen bars are already regular gym fare in New York and Toronto, providing clients with a boost of energy after their workouts. Berke is eager to be the first to bring the fruit-scented aromatherapy experience to Boston. The only snag? Massachusetts prohibits the administration of oxygen without a prescription. So while the bureaucrats argue over a bunch of air, owner Russell Robbat of Oxygen in Saugus prepares to do battle with Berke to see which will offer the ultra chic air first. —KS

Forget Jack Hannah. Boston has it's own cutesy, animal-loving expert and his name is Corwin. Jeff Corwin. Like Jack, the Cambridge resident also has his own TV show—Going Wild With Jeff Corwin—on the Disney Channel (Sundays at 7 pm), which features the biologist handling unusual animals from the prairie falcons along the Snake River to making nice-nice with a tapir in the Belize rainforest. Corwin earned his stripes from Bridgewater State College, receiving a degree in anthropology and biology, and cut his chops in rainforests and jungles worldwide as a research scientist.

Beauty & TRUTH

Dyed and Fried? Help Supplied

Boo hoo hoo! Your hair is playing the Drying Game, begging for your attention. Soothe those brittle, lifeless locks with moisturizing agents that restore, strengthen and add life to dyed, fried hair—and change that "boo-hoo-hoo" to "woo-woo-woo"!

And where to find these oils of wisdom? One word: Kiehl's. The testers and I bow to the awesome hydrating powers of Kiehl's vast selection of shampoos, conditioners, styling aids and conditioning packs. And check out our hair—baby, it swings and shines like a glitter-coated hammock.

Kiehl's is the answer for dry hair.

Here are our faves from the land of Special K:

✖ Fine-haired fillies with chemically distressed tresses can hydrate their heads without the greasy weigh-down-effects that other products leave behind, by using Kiehl's Herbal Shampoo for Dry to Normal Hair. Top it off with what we call the only Leave-In Conditioner for flat-free, healthy hair. Thanks to its built-in sunscreen, this potion is a must for any dame who bleaches and beaches.

✖ Don't get cranky 'cause your coarse, crinkley coif reminds you of pubic hair. Get Kiehl's Lecithin Conditioning Shampoo and their Extra-Strength Conditioning Rinse For Dry Hair—the dynamic duo that pampers parched pompadours. Tame the wilderness of your kinky hair with Kiehl's Lecithin And Coconut Hair Masque. For special occasions, my testers love to slick their hair back, and leave this stuff in all day. Six hours later, you shower and shave and are date-night ready, with the most touchable locks to let your lover loose in.

✖ Funked up your hair with too many at home chemistry kits? Run to Dr. Kiehl-good for a cure with the most magnificent deep conditioner packs ever created. I have seen phenomenal results on severely trashed hair even after one treatment—and the benefits linger for weeks.

Kiehl's products do cost more than drugstore brands—prices range from $7.95 for 'poos to $22.50 for deep packs—but their much higher quality is worth it. Find these true miracle hair fixers at any of these Kiehl's dealerships: Barneys at the Chestnut Hill Mall, Mario Russo Salon at 9 Newbury Street, Neiman Marcus and Saks. Or call 1-800-KIEHLS-1 for home delivery.

Reincarnate loser lipsticks in the microwave.

LIFE AFTER DEATH—FOR LIPSTICK

Every gal has one: a collection of lipsticks that will never get used. Waste not, want not, I always say: Let's recycle those crappy colors into your dream lip cream!

Protect your work space by laying down some paper towels or old IMPROPERS. Using a butter knife, cut chunks of lipstick out of the tube and place them on a plate. Now, in a separate, microwaveable container, mix the colors until you get your perfect tint. Then pop the container in the microwave for a minute—or till the colors completely liquefy.

Next, with an old eyedropper, gently squirt your concoction into a small, clean, resealable container, right up to the rim. For a snazzy look, I like to use empty eye shadow or blush compacts. Let your dame-made cosmetics cool for 20 minutes and voilà: custom lip tints from unused sticks!

Here are some tips to give your recipes kick:

- Turn a favorite matte into a sheer, non-drying shade by adding Vaseline, or my testers' fave, Kiehl's Lip Balm #1.
- Tone down an over-red tube by adding yellow lipstick, or turn an orangey-red into a blue-blood scarlet by adding blue. Wet 'N' Wild makes funky primary colors that only cost a buck—use these for add-ins or as raw material if you are short on reject colors but still want to play.
- Make-up pros use cool lipstick palettes that look like water color trays but come with a mirror and lid. Find these color platters at beauty supply shops like Michaud Cosmetics, 115 Newbury Street Suite 303.

MADE IN THE SHADE

Thanks to the screwed-up ozone layer, spiteful Sol is shooting out deadly rays that knock through the defenses of even the strongest sunblocks. Don the armor of the new millenium: clothes that kick solar butt—because Cancer should be nobody's sun sign.

Your basic Gap T-shirts and other fabrics unfortunately only have an SPF of 5-9—hardly enough to ward off sun damage. That's where a new line of SPF clothing from a company called Sun Precautions comes in. Their FDA-cleared hats, shirts, skirts, pants and kid's clothing block 97 percent of the harmful UVA and UVB rays, for an SPF of 30 or more. Sun Precautions beam-barricading fabrics aren't coated, just tightly woven and not too heavy. Now that's what I call made in the shade!

Sounds too good to be true? Well, there is one catch: Their styles are wicked preppie. But I am sure you clever bike courier lads and lassies, who need all-day sun protection—but also a statement of style—can spruce up these basic, L.L. Bean-like duds with some fabric paint or a few patches from Newbury Comics.

Call Sun Precautions at 1-800-882-7860 for a catalog; have them send one to your gardening grandma who you want to protect against that great ball of fire.

Valentina Cervi conveys Artemisia's anguish.

MOVIES

Pure Passion

By Betsy Sherman

Artemisia is a baroque melodrama about love and art, carnal and canvas

WE'VE ALREADY HAD A MOVIE THIS year called Live Flesh, and one that bleated the mantra "girl power" (what can those Spice Girls mean by it?). Both phrases apply to the new French biopic Artemisia, which imagines the formative years of the Italian painter of the 1600s, Artemisia Gentileschi. Artemisia not only defied convention by pursuing a life in art, she painted the human figure at a time when women were forbidden by Vatican law to look at nude male models. The teenager's determination to translate the carnal to the canvas complicated her life, and makes for a fascinating and provocative, if uneven, film.

The pivotal event in Artemisia's life was the trial in which her teacher, Agostino Tassi, was accused of raping her. The film by Agnes Merlet (her second after Son of the Shark) becomes problematic in its treatment of the relationship between mentor and pupil, and the scandal that ensued. But it has great merit, especially in its early passages when it portrays the resourcefulness of a talented and privileged girl who blazes her own trail to self-expression. Italian actress Valentina Cervi (Portrait of a Lady) dynamically conveys Artemisia's passion for knowledge and her youthful stubbornness.

The film's three main characters represent different incarnations of the artistic life of early 17th century Rome. Artemisia's widower father, Orazio Gentileschi (Michel Serrault), is a thriving artist-businessman who fulfills commissions from for rich patrons for portraits and from the Vatican for church frescoes. Tassi (Miki Manojlovic of Underground) is the artist as rock star, indulging in orgies and affairs with his models. He incorporates new theories about perspective into his work, and paints outdoors from nature (a practice uncommon in Rome). Artemisia, while also fueled by pride, is a purer being than the older men, pulled into art for its own sake.

Artemisia immediately evokes the Baroque era with chiaroscuro cinematography. As a convent girl, Artemisia sneaks a candle and mirror into her room at night and furiously sketches parts of her body. She is expelled for immodesty. She joins the hubbub of her father's studio, where models are arranged theatrically to recreate scenes from the Bible or antiquity. Prevented by her father from sketching the models, she entices young fisherman Fulvio into stripping so she can study the male form. The beach becomes the haven where Artemisia learns about bodies and how they fit together. She observes a couple making love, then lies in the crevice their bodies made in the sand. Significantly, it is on the beach where she meets Tassi.

Gentileschi allows his daughter to apprentice under Tassi, who can teach her the art of perspective. With her teacher, the virginal Artemisia affects a wordly air. Their sexual encounter begins playfully, then goes further than Artemisia expected. Yet her reaction to her deflowering is one of surprise more than alarm (Cervi's gasp jumps from the screen). They have an affair that continues until gossip reaches Gentileschi, who drags Artemisia home and has Tassi arrested for rape.

Merlet and her co-writers worked from transcripts from pretrial cross-examinations; the rest is conjecture. They clearly posit love between the girl and the rogue (in an interview, Merlet compared their passion to Wuthering Heights). During the trial, opposing factions work toward selfish ends. Gentileschi's fatherly concern is coupled with a wish to knock a competitor out of action. Tassi's patron tries to sully Artemisia's reputation in order to get his golden boy back to work.

Artemisia's anguish, and torture by authorities who want her to withdraw charges, drive her to paint a violent interpretation of Judith Beheading Holophernes. Its figures resemble her and her betraying lover. The movie recaptures its strength with this denouement, even after its middle passages have suffered from the high-pitched melodrama of the affair and the trial. It is Artemisia's romance with art that makes Artemisia unique. ✦

AD HOC

Daily Dregs

By Tom Weisend

Then there's the cretin who appears to be sexually aroused by tea bags

I AM KATHIE LEE'S PRISONER. THREE DAYS a week, I climb onto the treadmill or Stairmaster at about 9 am for a 45 minute walk to nowhere (but a fitter, happier me). And most mornings, the gym's TV is tuned to WHDH, channel 7. As the treadmill is sapping my body, Ms. Gifford is sapping my mind.

There they are, Kathie Lee and Regis, talking a lot. The show has its trying moments, such as when Kathie Lee talks about the famous people she knows and what her kids said during last night's prayers. This is a woman on an ego trip on par with Rasputin's. But the worst part about this program are the commercials. Gas relief elixirs, border mulch mix, toilet paper and laundry products seem to draw the parameters of the world. Ms. Gifford herself is less chipper than these insipid ads that flock to the show. This is daytime TV. This is where more than $120 billion on advertising is spent every year. This is a pity. Unless you're a hungry person who has been injured on the job who's prone to cleaning frenzies and has bad credit, these ads play like some commercial theater of the absurd.

It's a pity.

All the ads rush together, like some unfortunate meal that causes nausea. Fortunately, there's a product out there to relieve such pain. It's Phenzyme, the anti-gas remedy, and it's "Phenzyme Fast." In a cosmic example of irony, the very next ad stars groups of people who proudly declare, "I don't use toilet paper." I sadly remind myself that the people responsible for such ad abominations make far more money that do I.

Daytime has a lot of food. This isn't lost on me as I burn calories on the treadmill. The food on daytime TV doesn't just lie there waiting to be eaten. It's in motion. Polaner jelly slingshots a strawberry through a piece of toast. Little cheeses play hide and seek. M&Ms race around foolishly. Rampaging berries create a new Quaker Oats snack. The Jell-O wiggles violently. This food has most certainly been through EST training, learning about action verbs.

The only thing more idiotic than the food in daytime TV ads are the saps who consume it. The moron grand prize goes to a woman who cannot open her non-dairy coffee creamer carton—not with a knife, saw or her own will. She finally gets it open, only to splash it all over her red blouse. This kind of simp is what I imagine one would get if one went through with an internet date. The runner-up commercial cretin is the woman who appears to sexually aroused by her Salada tea bags. She bites her lower lip when the kettle's whistle sounds. She appears to have a bit of foreplay with the bag as she unfurls the little string. This makes me more tired than the treadmill.

James Sokolove, the lawyer who revolutionized attorney advertising in Boston, has a big presence. Apparently, if anything bad has ever happened to you, it was someone else's fault and they should be held accountable. The Money Store, First Plus and their competitors want to give those of us with bad credit a hand. One call and you owe practically nothing, from what Jim Palmer and Dan Marino seem to tell us in the unceasing ads.

The lowest point comes when Regis himself does a commercial for Amturf. I'm not easily appalled, but this ad gets me all the way there. He and the wife Joy (who is she by the way?) sleepwalk through this piece of manure. They deliver crappy, wooden lines with no verve and even less humor. I'll count myself lucky that Carnival Cruise Lines doesn't buy time on R&KL to unleash those Kathie Lee-voiced ads.

Oh no, Loni Anderson's the next guest. Gotta get off this treadmill. ✦

Melting Pot

By Paul Robicheau

Out of Virginia, Agents of Good Roots follow in Dave Matthews' footsteps

AGENTS OF GOOD ROOTS MAY STILL BE a mystery to most people. But if there's any justice on radio and MTV, the Virginia quartet should grow from one of 1998's most promising new bands to one of its most widely appreciated.

Perhaps you've already been brushed by the sound of Agents of Good Roots. The group has earned airplay with two different singles from its major-label debut One by One. "Come On" is the one heard on modern-rock radio, an edgy ode to freedom that partly echoes the Beatles' "Tomorrow Never Knows," while the sax-wound "Smiling Up The Frown" has graced adult-alternative stations with more of a Steely Dan/Hothouse Flowers feel.

Yet One by One taps other divergent but equally infectious moods. There's the country flavored "Miss Misbelieving," as well as the earthy, Prince-like "Upspin" and the sunny soul-pop of "Hoping, Waiting, Longing," both sweetened with female harmonies. And the gravely voiced Agents crank the volume with funky rage in "Two Bucks in Cash" and sexy psychedelia in "Shortchange." Produced by Paul Fox (10,000 Maniacs, XTC, Phish), the album is a melting pot of wily assimilations spun into fresh twists.

"I think our diversity is a result of the fact that we'd go fuckin' nuts if we had to play the same-sounding type of shit every song," says singer-guitarist Andrew Winn, who doubles on electric piano. "You find you need different outlets to be stimulated, you know? It would be as if the jazz guys never did ballads or played in [a time signature of] three."

In turn, the Agents' musical pedigree is surprising for a pop-savvy outfit. Winn is a classically trained guitarist, while drummer Brian Jones and saxophonist J.C. Kuhl enjoy talking about their favorite avant-garde jazz artists. Jones (who likes hip-hop as well) splits most of the lead vocals and writing with Winn, but bassist Stewart Myers also chips in. The four musicians, all in their early 20s, came out of Richmond's college scene.

"If there was ever a case of sticking a square peg in a round hole, it's been our band," says Winn, whose group expects to play Boston again at the end of July, either at the H.O.R.D.E. Festival or a club show. "When you only see the final product, you don't see the process of chipping away the stone to make a jewel, and the album I would consider somewhat of a jewel."

"What is more important, realizing an idea with whatever potential possible, or limiting your ideas to your physical potential?" Winn poses. "Let's say you were a piano player and you had one hand, and the other one was cut off in a lawn accident or something. But in your head, you heard music with two hands. Would you write music for one hand or two?"

His answer is both. Winn reasons that for the new CD, he aimed for the "maximum minimalism" of the core band as well as produced elements like the female vocalists, strings and Wallflowers organist Rami Jaffe.

Winn is a man who knows his physical limitations. In fact, it's a wonder he's even a singer. When he was 14, Winn crushed his larynx in a skiing accident in West Virginia, slamming his fist into his throat when he hit a lift stanchion. "They flew me in a helicopter to Roanoke, and drilled a hole in my neck, and I breathed," Winn says in a speaking voice that's raspier than his singing voice. He couldn't talk for two months. "I was into music, and had a lot of free time," Winn says, "so I played a lot of guitar."

The deep, raw voices of Winn and Jones, plus Kuhl's sax, have fueled some comparisons to the Dave Matthews Band, which has grown from the bars of Charlottesville, Va., to a soldout Foxboro Stadium June 5. The two groups share management. "Early on, they were an influence on our band. I mean, they were an influence on the whole state," Winn says. "But we were like, hey, lightning doesn't strike twice like that. You gotta be your own sound."

Or a different combination of many. ✦

THE DISH

Welcome to Spring

By Nini Diana

Patios reopen...Bob the Chef's caters to Fenway...Kinsale comes to town

SPRING CHANGES MY LIFE. IT MAKES me feel like letting my hair down. I don't really have much to let down, but bear with me in the metaphor. It's an instant mood elevator, a beginning of celebrations, outdoor dining and festivals. Restaurants are shaking out winter and letting in the breeze.

Let's start our spring tour in Cambridge where Daddy-O's reopens its sunny garden patio on May 10. The garden is being tended by John Palughi, who has been featured in Bon Appetit for his garden work. Also in Cambridge, Redbones is kicking off its spring festivities with the New England Real Ale Exhibition. It sounds like a museum exhibit, but it's not. More than 20 breweries from the US and Great Britain are participating in the event, which runs from May 7-10. Nothing says summer like beer and barbecue, and it doesn't get much better than Redbones.

Redbones brews.

While the word harvest suggests autumn, I'll include the restaurant Harvest on this tour. John Delpha, currently the sous chef at Mistral, will be joining the staff as the executive chef when the restaurant reopens in August. Also new to Harvest and to Boston will be general manager Christopher Glionna.

I wouldn't be doing my job if this tour didn't include a trip to Fenway Park. It isn't just for baseball anymore. Daryl Settles, owner of Bob the Chef's restaurant, has set up a concession stand in the park. Whoopee, an alternative to hotdogs made from animal by-products and lips. Settles serves some of the restaurant's most popular dishes including jambalaya and grilled chicken rollups. He says that they are hoping to set up a cart outside Fenway as well, along Lansdowne Street where some of the more popular sausage carts are, so wave as you go by.

Our tour continues on to Government Center where a new Irish pub, the Kinsale, is being reconstructed piece by piece. The pub was built in its entirety in Ireland then shipped here. Note the lovely stone fireplace and light fixtures. Yes, pubs are a dime a dozen in this part of the world, but this is the first prefab pub on the Freedom Trail. History shmistory.

More and more, some of our finer chefs have been setting up stakes outside the city where rents are cheaper. The newest of these pioneers is Evan Deluty, former chef at Upstairs at the Pudding, who is opening his restaurant, Bistro 5, in West Medford Square, with his soon-to-be-wife Candace Blum. Meanwhile, back at the Pudding, chef/owner Deborah Hughes is planning to take this time to get back into the kitchen a bit as she looks for Deluty's replacement.

Since this is a comprehensive tour, it must include wining as well as dining. THE IMPROPER's wine expert, Sandy Block, will be at the Club Cafe on Columbus Avenue May 13 for a tasting of wines and food from Australia and New Zealand. Chef Julia Brant will be preparing a special menu. Now what could that be, kangaroo burgers and vegemite?

As with every holiday (Hallmark inspired or otherwise) most of the hotels and restaurants in town are creating special menus for Mothers Day. Okay, so maybe this wasn't as good as a Duck Tour, but I did my best. At least I didn't make you quack. ✦

This Harvey's Real

By J. Charles Mokriski

New Lyons Group South End eatery proffers fine food at good-neighbor prices

HARVEY'S, THE LATEST IN THE GAGGLE of restaurants owned by Patrick Lyons and company, opened six months ago in the turreted brick townhouse that once housed the St. Botolph restaurant. A culinary pioneer of the South End, fashionable for most of the past 20 years, St. Botolph's had lately languished, eclipsed by the hot, new South End dining-scape. Into the breach came Lyons, who, with partners Brian O'Neal and Bill Poirier, had already expanded beyond Lansdowne Street clubs with restaurants Sonsie in the Back Bay and The Good Life downtown.

Occupying two floors, Harvey's maintained St. Botolph's core decor, with bare brick walls, exposed ducts, shiny black lacquered floors and big bay windows looking out onto the leafy South End neighborhood.

Consistent with its bistro ambience, Harvey's prices, for the most part, are consumer friendly. An exception are the wines, which include one lonely $19 selection and several in the $20s. Most of the entries on the 50 item wine list fetch prices well over $30, with aggressive markups on the lower cost bottles. Still, we enjoyed the Chateau Routas 'Infernet' ($21), a 1995 red from the Var (not the Rhone, contra the list). Tannic, with an earthy flavor, this was a particularly good exemplar of a Varois wine, full of the sunshine of the South of France. A glass of Les Amandiers, a 1996 red really from the Rhone ($5.25), was less enjoyable, closed and astringent. Better was a draft pint of the classic Czech brew, Pilsner Urquel ($4), which would make a great companion to Harvey's hand-formed cheeseburger with cottage fries ($8.75).

First courses included a bountiful bucket of fried calamari ($7), hot, fresh, crisp and tender. Although accompanied by a small ramekin of marinara sauce for dipping, the calamari were far too exquisite with a simple squeeze of lemon to require or invite additional garnish. Best of all, the portion was ample to be shared. French onion soup ($5) was less successful. Instead of being baked and served in a crock, it arrived less than hot in a large, broad brimmed soup bowl, with a soggy crouton that may or may not have delivered the promised Gruyere. From the pizza and pasta selections, we savored the white pizza with double blanched garlic and sliced portabellos ($7.25). The ultra-thin crust was the best we have tasted this side of New Haven, and the sliced mushrooms, chopped parsley, onions and cheese, all suffused with the muted essence of garlic, were delectable. Bucatini pasta with roasted tomatoes ($8.25) was a tasty bowl of long, hollow noodles in a luscious tomato sauce—rich, tangy and dark. While the noodles' texture was largely al dente, a few of them were slightly crusty, as if the preparation had been run under the broiler just before reaching the table.

Main courses, except for a tendency to the vertical, were first rate. Chef Jason Dacier, who was sous chef at Sonsie under Bill Poirier for three years, featured a Long Island duck, cooked two ways ($17.50), which was spectacular. Tender, juicy slices of rare breast fanned out from a plump, crispy skinned duck drumstick. Harvey's Berbere steak with frizzled onions ($19.50) was one of its taller dishes (nowhere in our eating travels have we encountered such obsession with tall food as here in Boston), but the principal embodiment of this height—crisp, lightly fried onion rings—were so delicious that the verticality was easy to forgive. And the beef itself was tender, rare as ordered, and flavorful.

Bread baked on the premises varied on different visits from exceptional to ordinary. Desserts, at $5, were noteworthy mainly for their size. A fudge brownie with cappuccino frosting and vanilla ice cream arrived in a large bowl with what must have been a half pint of ice cream. The old fashioned apple crisp, slightly misnamed since the pastry wasn't crisp, was similarly accompanied by a mountain of ice cream, but the sweetness of the apples and flavor of the cinnamon made the combination a satisfying denouement.

Harvey's service was friendly, enthusiastic and efficient one night; perfunctory another.

Still, it is a most credible dining spot. In a neighborhood where restaurant pricing grows ever more aggressive, Harvey's, despite its curiously inapt name—supposedly taken from the Jimmy Stewart movie about an imaginary rabbit—represents, except for the wine, a reasonable alternative to its tonier competition. ✦

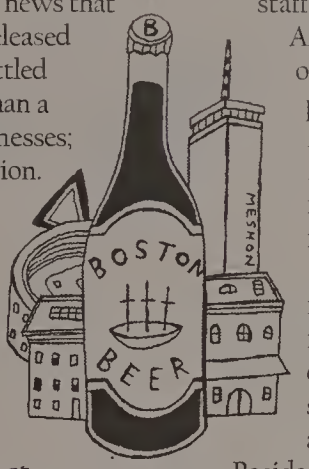
BEER

Born Again

By Peter R. Terhune



The city's making a comeback as a haven for brewers and our very own bottlers

RATHER THAN TACKLE SOME LOFTY ISSUE like the sad verity that hops make women randy but have the opposite effect on men, I'll share some recent noteworthy happenings on the Boston beer scene. To fully appreciate them, however, it's necessary to take you back 100 years or so, when the city's brewing industry was at its apex.

In 1890, 27 breweries did business in Boston, making the Hub the US city with the highest number of breweries per capita. These breweries employed thousands of citizens, and contributed much to the life of the city. The bulk of them were in Roxbury and Jamaica Plain, though Charlestown and South Boston each boasted two. Industry consolidation, the rise of national breweries, Prohibition and the Depression all winnowed the ranks of Boston's breweries. Haffenreffer was the last to close, in 1964, ending a 327-year legacy of beer brewed by, and for, Bostonians.

You might think that these were quaint little factories whose remnants have long disappeared from our cityscape, and you'd be wrong. Mostly. In truth, those breweries stood three and four stories tall, and occupied at least a city block, if not more. The buildings that still exist (like the American Brewing Co. at 235 Heath Street, the Houghton Brewery at 125 Halleck Street or the Frank Jones Brewery at 524 East Second Street in South Boston) are either so massive and/or ornate and so much a part of the urban landscape that people rarely lift their eyes to the structures' tablets to divine their original identity. Try this simple test: drive by Larkin Movers at 3175 Washington Street, look up at the top of the building and you'll be rewarded with a sight of the wrought iron logo of the Franklin Brewing Co.

Viewed in this context, the news that Harpoon and Tremont have released new products brewed and bottled right here in Boston is more than a cheery update from local businesses; it represents a return to tradition. When you pick up a bottle of the new Harpoon Maibock, Munich Dark or Tremont IPA, you're holding—and eventually drinking—a product that was brewed and bottled right here in town, by folks you might easily bump into on the street, at companies that pay taxes in this jurisdiction. Heck, they even support local causes like Rosie's Place (Harpoon) and the DeCordova museum (Tremont). Why not show your appreciation for these upholders of the city's brewing traditions by purchasing six-packs of the medium-bodied, malty Maibock, the rich, delicious, chewy Munich or Tremont's robust, crisp, hoppy IPA. While you're at it, enjoy Harpoon's Brewstock, June 4 to 6, and Tremont's Music Fest, June 27.

Speaking of noteworthy beer-related events, Boston Beer Works recently celebrated its sixth anniversary by holding a s.r.o. birthday party on April 6 replete with friends of the brewery, noteworthy Bostonians and grade-C celebrities such as myself. Beer Works' staff brewed a crisp, refreshing Anniversary Ale to mark the occasion. The XPA (for extra pale ale) was made entirely from organic ingredients; further proof that getting rid of pesticides doesn't mean getting rid of flavor.

There are few events as indelibly Boston as the marathon, and there are few establishments that have as solid a lock on Marathonia as the Back Bay Brewing Co. Besides hiring former Eliot Lounge stalwart/Boston running doyen Tommy Leonard as official greeter for its dynamite marathon party, Back Bay exhibits scads of photos and other memorabilia from the man's extensive collection in its Tommy Leonard Room. It's a rare treat to order up a half pint of brewer Tod Mott's 9 percent alcohol by volume weizenbock and gaze at the pictures Bill Rodgers, Joan Benoit, Johnny Kelly and other marathon greats. ✦

Soroff/On STEPHEN McCAULEY

STEPHEN MCCAULEY, 42, IS A NATIVE OF WOBURN AND A GRADUATE OF Columbia and the University of Vermont. A former reviewer and columnist for the Phoenix, he has written for Harper's, Vanity Fair, Vogue and The New York Times Book Review and has taught writing and literature at UMass, Wellesley, Harvard and Brandeis. His most recent novel was The Man of the House, which followed The Easy Way Out, a book that led one critic to call him "The secret love child of Woody Allen and Edith Wharton." His first novel, The Object of My Affection, is now a movie with a screenplay by award-winning playwright Wendy Wasserstein. With his boyfriend, fellow writer Sebastian Stuart, McCauley lives in Cambridge.

Jonathan Soroff: So tell me about the movie premier.
Stephen McCauley: Well, they put us up in a nice hotel and sent a limousine, and there was a red carpet, and everyone was hanging over the railing—lots of paparazzi—and when the door to our car opened, everyone looked in and said, "Oh, it's nobody." That was the highlight for me—being recognized as a nobody.
JS: What 'somebodies' were there?
SM: Well, the stars. And Courtney Love came. So did Ellen DeGeneres and Anne Heche. My mother said, "Go tell them who you are so you can introduce me," which I did.
JS: Wendy Wasserstein wrote the screenplay. That must be very flattering.
SM: Flattering would have been getting asked to write it myself, but the novel is written from the perspective of a gay man, and they clearly wanted to make this a mainstream movie, so they needed another take on it.
JS: How was it watching characters on screen that originated in your mind?
SM: The weird thing was that Wendy added a number of characters, so it was kind of like throwing a party with a lot of guests I hadn't invited, but they were all so charming that I didn't care.
JS: Is selling a novel to Hollywood sort of like selling your soul to the devil?
SM: I think the devil probably offers more in return.
JS: Any major purchases with the money you did make?
SM: I bought my first suit, at the age of 42, for the premier.
JS: What did you do before you became a writer?
SM: For about seven years, I worked at a travel agency with a very late-'70s atmosphere, a lot of dropouts and ex-hippies working there. It was fun, although I was terrible at it and I didn't like the work. It's very detail-oriented. I once got a call from a customer who was in San Diego. He said, "I wanted to go to San Francisco." Then there was the category of people we called "Warm and Cheap." They'll go anywhere hot and inexpensive—literally anywhere. The first person who organizes a package tour to hell will get rich.
JS: How do you feel about being identified as "a gay writer?"
SM: I'm happy to be identified as a writer, and as for gay, I am, so I guess that makes me a gay writer. It's funny. Entertainment Weekly called to fact-check a story and asked if I was out. I said, "No, I'm really straight, but I've written three novels from the point of view of a gay man. I'm just very creative."
JS: Sebastian just sold his first novel. Any competition between you?
SM: You mean like forgetting to give a message like "Your editor called three weeks ago?" No. I'm thrilled.
JS: What term do you use for him—lover, boyfriend, partner, significant other?
SM: Partner is too businesslike. Significant Other sounds ridiculous. I prefer to think of him as my slave. Don't print that.
JS: Okay, Gay Pride Day—pro or con?
SM: I love it, but I think they should have it in January. All the guys with the great gym bodies could still run around in shorts and no shirts—because you know that neither rain, nor sleet nor snow could stop them—and the rest of us who hate our bodies could layer on the overcoats.
JS: True or false: Cambridge is a lesbianocracy.
SM: False. Now it's a Volvo-ocracy. It's changed a lot since they got rid of rent control. It's not nearly as eccentric or interesting.
JS: Ever seen someone in a public place reading one of your books?
SM: Yeah. I was at a bakery, and the woman at the next table was reading my novel. I said, "Do you like that?" and, thank God, she said, "Yes." So I said, "I wrote it." Then she looked at the picture on the back and said, "Did you really used to look like this?"
JS: Do you ever drop your own name to get better service at a restaurant?
SM: Where, at the take-out joint up the street? They'd laugh at me.
JS: When you were a kid, did you live in a dream world?
SM: Yeah, the dream world of Woburn, right next to the toxic waste dump.
JS: What are you reading right now?
SM: I read a lot of things at once and I never finish any of them. Right now I'm reading Reflections in a Golden Eye by Carson McCullers, a book about eunuchs in India called The Invisibles and Jackie Collins' new novel, because we have the same editor. And I will probably finish none of them.
JS: Describe your writing process. Where? When? What do you wear?
SM: I have a little office in a building with a lot of shrinks, so I'm always tempted to listen through the walls. I go there in the morning, buy a cup of coffee, take out my notebooks, and immediately lie down for a nap. Then I go to the gym, come back, have lunch and take another nap. It's very rigorous.
JS: How does your family react to your success?
SM: Well, no one in my family has ever read one of my books, although they all claim to, so I quiz them. "What did you like best?" "Oh, the middle." But they were happy about the movie.
JS: What's the biggest prize you've ever won, or the thing that gave you the most validation?
SM: That's easy. I've only won one thing. My books have been translated into French and they really like them....
JS: So you're like the Jerry Lewis of literature?
SM: I wouldn't go quite that far. Maybe the Dean Martin. But anyway, they made me a Chevalier in the Order of Arts and Letters.
JS: So now you can refer to yourself as Stephen McCauley, Chevalier.
SM: I always do. ✦

IT'S A HOT TIME IN THE OLD TOWN TONIGHT

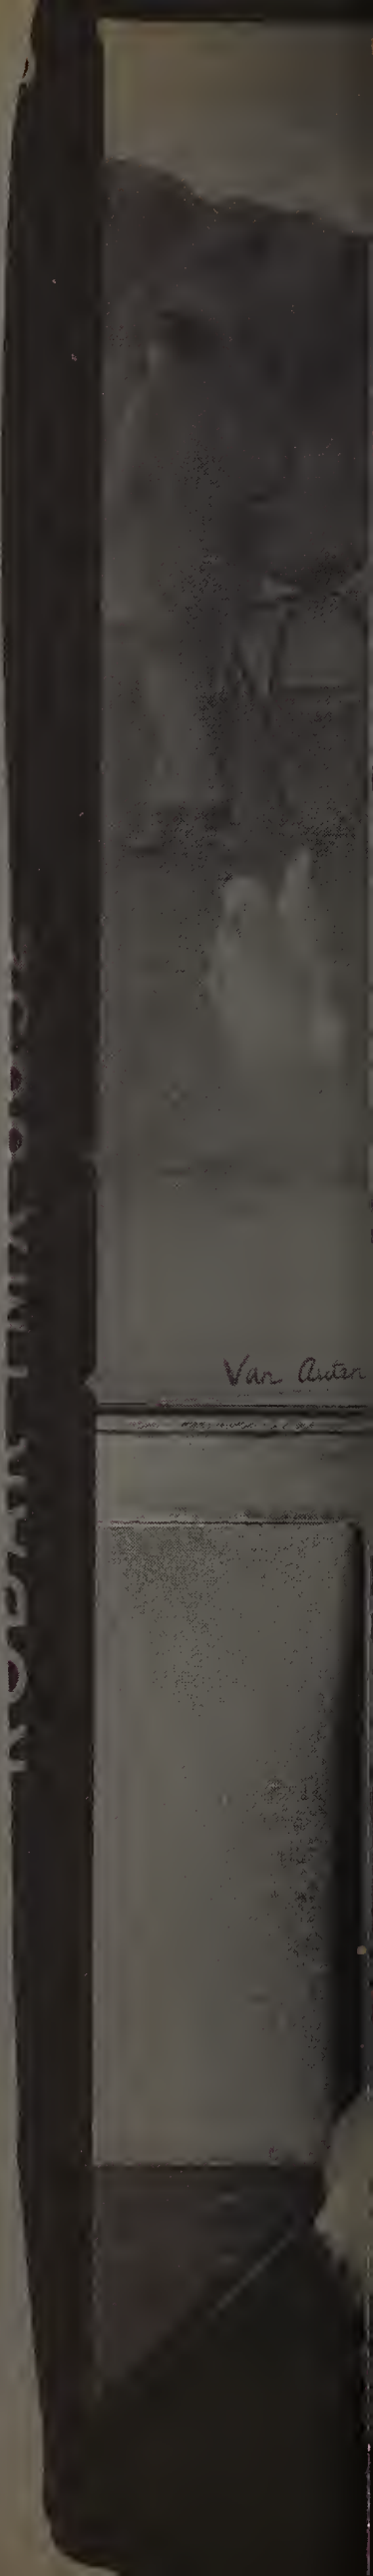
IF THE IDEA OF GOING OUT

IN THE FINANCIAL DISTRICT

STILL CONJURES UP VISIONS OF SOGGY NACHOS

AND LUKEWARM ROLLING ROCK,

THINK AGAIN.



AFTER YEARS OF BATTLING THE BLAHS,

DOWNTOWN HAS PUT ITSELF

ON THE HAPPENING SCENES MAP.

BY VAL KHACHATRES

Photographs By Kathy Chapman

Liam Tierman and Michael Sherlock
of Michael Sherlock's

IN THE PAST YEAR, DOWNTOWN HAS SEEN A WAVE OF NEW RESTAURANT AND BAR OPENINGS, INCLUDING FASHIONABLE wine-and-oyster bars (The Vault), bring-your-Prada clubs (The Exchange), power-suit pubs (The Elephant & Castle, Michael Sherlock's), alternate band venues (The Times), microbreweries (Fort Hill Brew Pub) and fine dining (Le Midi). Not to be left in the dust, the district's old-time players have reinvented themselves with new decors, menus and attitudes. The recycled list includes Patten's (now Coogan's Bluff), Limericks (now Oliver's), and The International (formerly Chadwick's), which opened a downstairs disco. Kitty O'Shea's, a Dublin pub chain, is also slated to open on the corner of State and India Streets.

Financial district pubs, dating bars and restaurants have always enjoyed the luxury of a captive lunch and happy hour crowd. Nighttime and weekends were a far different story. Proprietors and patrons alike took it as a rule that people just didn't want to hang around where they worked after they logged off for the day. But the continued success of Il Panino Trattoria, which opened a little over four years ago on Franklin Street, has changed that thinking.

With its la dolce vita feel, Il Panino became an instant hit with Europhiles and single yuppies. Even after four years, the multi-storied dining/dancing emporium still packs in a crowd all week long, a feat once considered impossible downtown, save for Qunicy Market.

"I was a little afraid at first to venture into the financial district because people there went home at five or six o'clock. But that idea has changed now," says Frank DePasquale, lead owner of Il Panino's mushrooming chain of restaurants that include Vado Pazzo and Il Panino Express.

DePasquale attributes Il Panino's success to being able to lure tourists from the area's growing number of hotels and convince financial district denizens to stay put after work. "It's a matter of trying to keep people staying a little later...which is great for people wanting to avoid rush hour," he says. And because people see how popular the establishment is during the week, says DePasquale, they're more inclined to seek it out on the weekends.

With visions of Il Panino's lines out the door dancing in their heads, the new generation of financial district restaurateurs is setting out to prove that DePasquale's success in more than a fluke. The key, they say, is to give patrons what they want: quality and variety. If people have a number of choices available to them, they'll be more inclined to either stay in the area after work or trek in from the 'burbs on weekends.

"I'd like to see even more restaurants here," says Susan Fortuna, who with business partner Bob Seager opened The Vault to great response in July. "More places would mean less going to Newbury Street. They'll just stay down here."

"The customer base has always been here, but until now they've been settling for a lot less," says Susan Tiernan, manager of Michael Sherlock's on Broad Street and a former manager of nearby Brandy Pete's. "Other places had become impersonal because they felt they made their money."

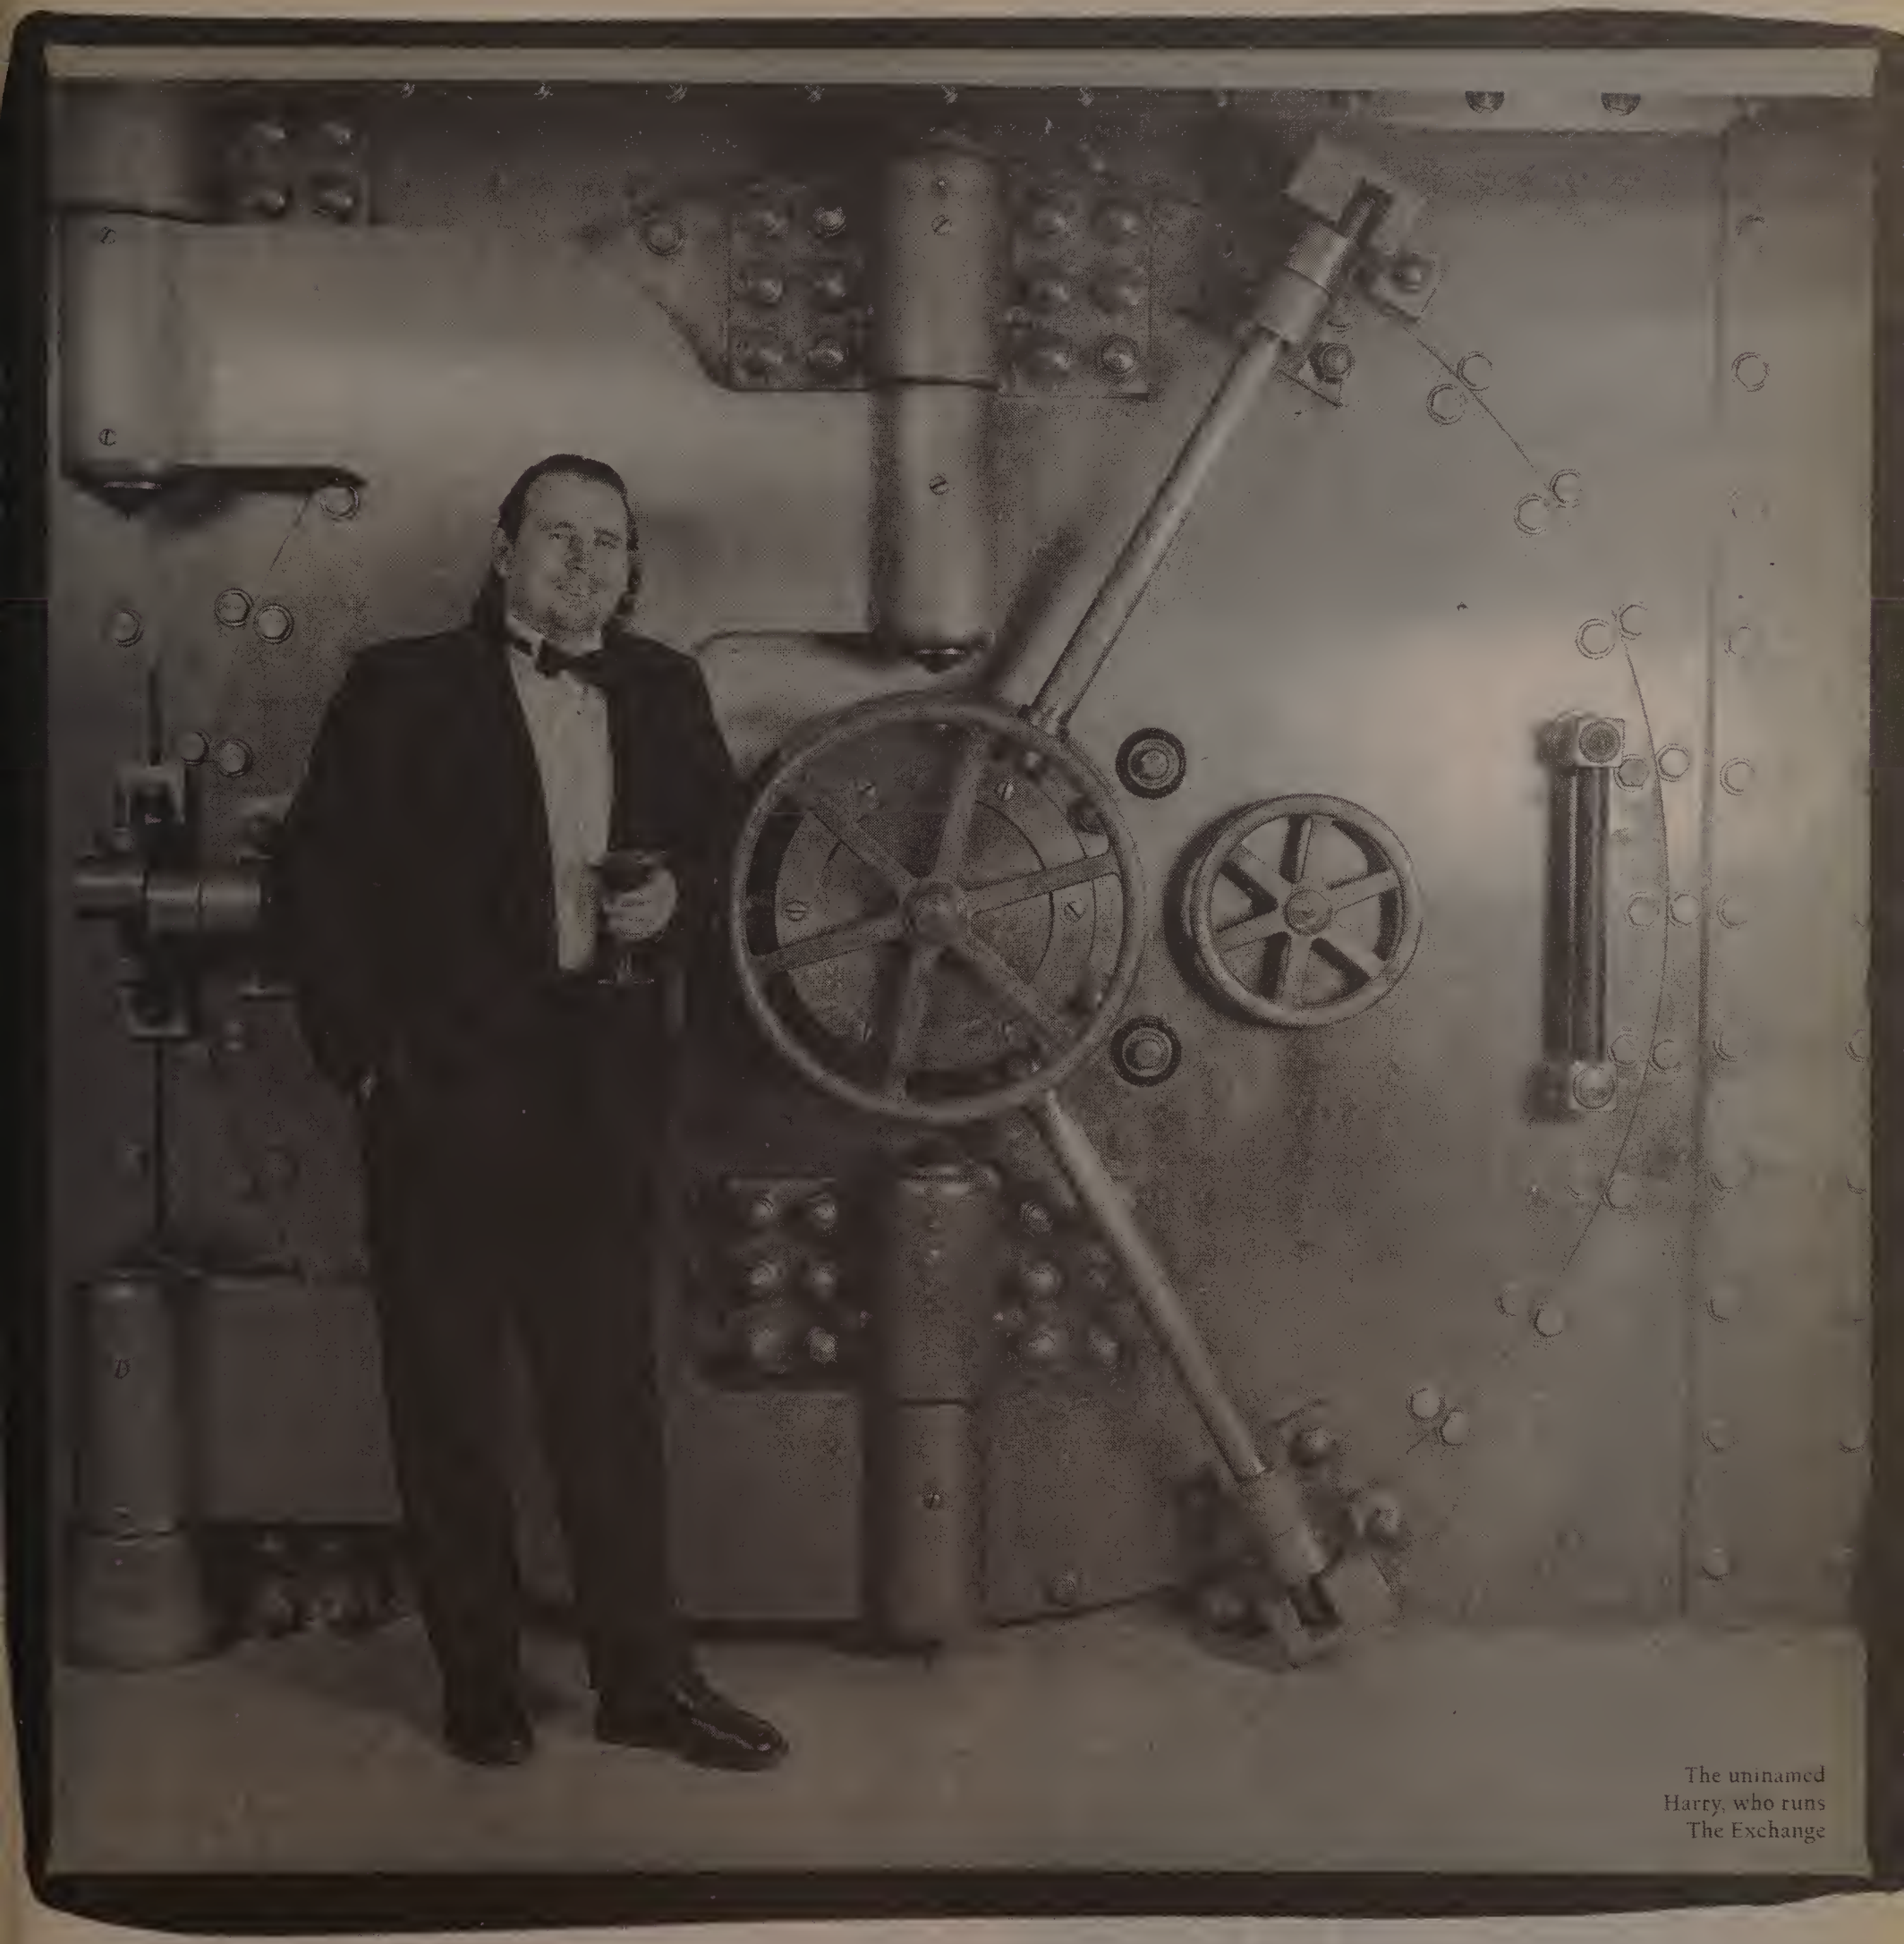
Bob Seager and Susan Fortuna of The Vault

Kathy Chapman

Because of that, establishments are now concentrating their efforts on quality food and spirits. Gone are the days of menus featuring an impressive selection of potato skins. Two of the area's most popular sites, for example, The Vault and Michael Sherlock's, both report that at least 60 percent of their business is in food sales. Much of this, they say, is due to more female patrons, who tend to gnosh while they drink, and an increasingly more sophisticated diner and drinker.

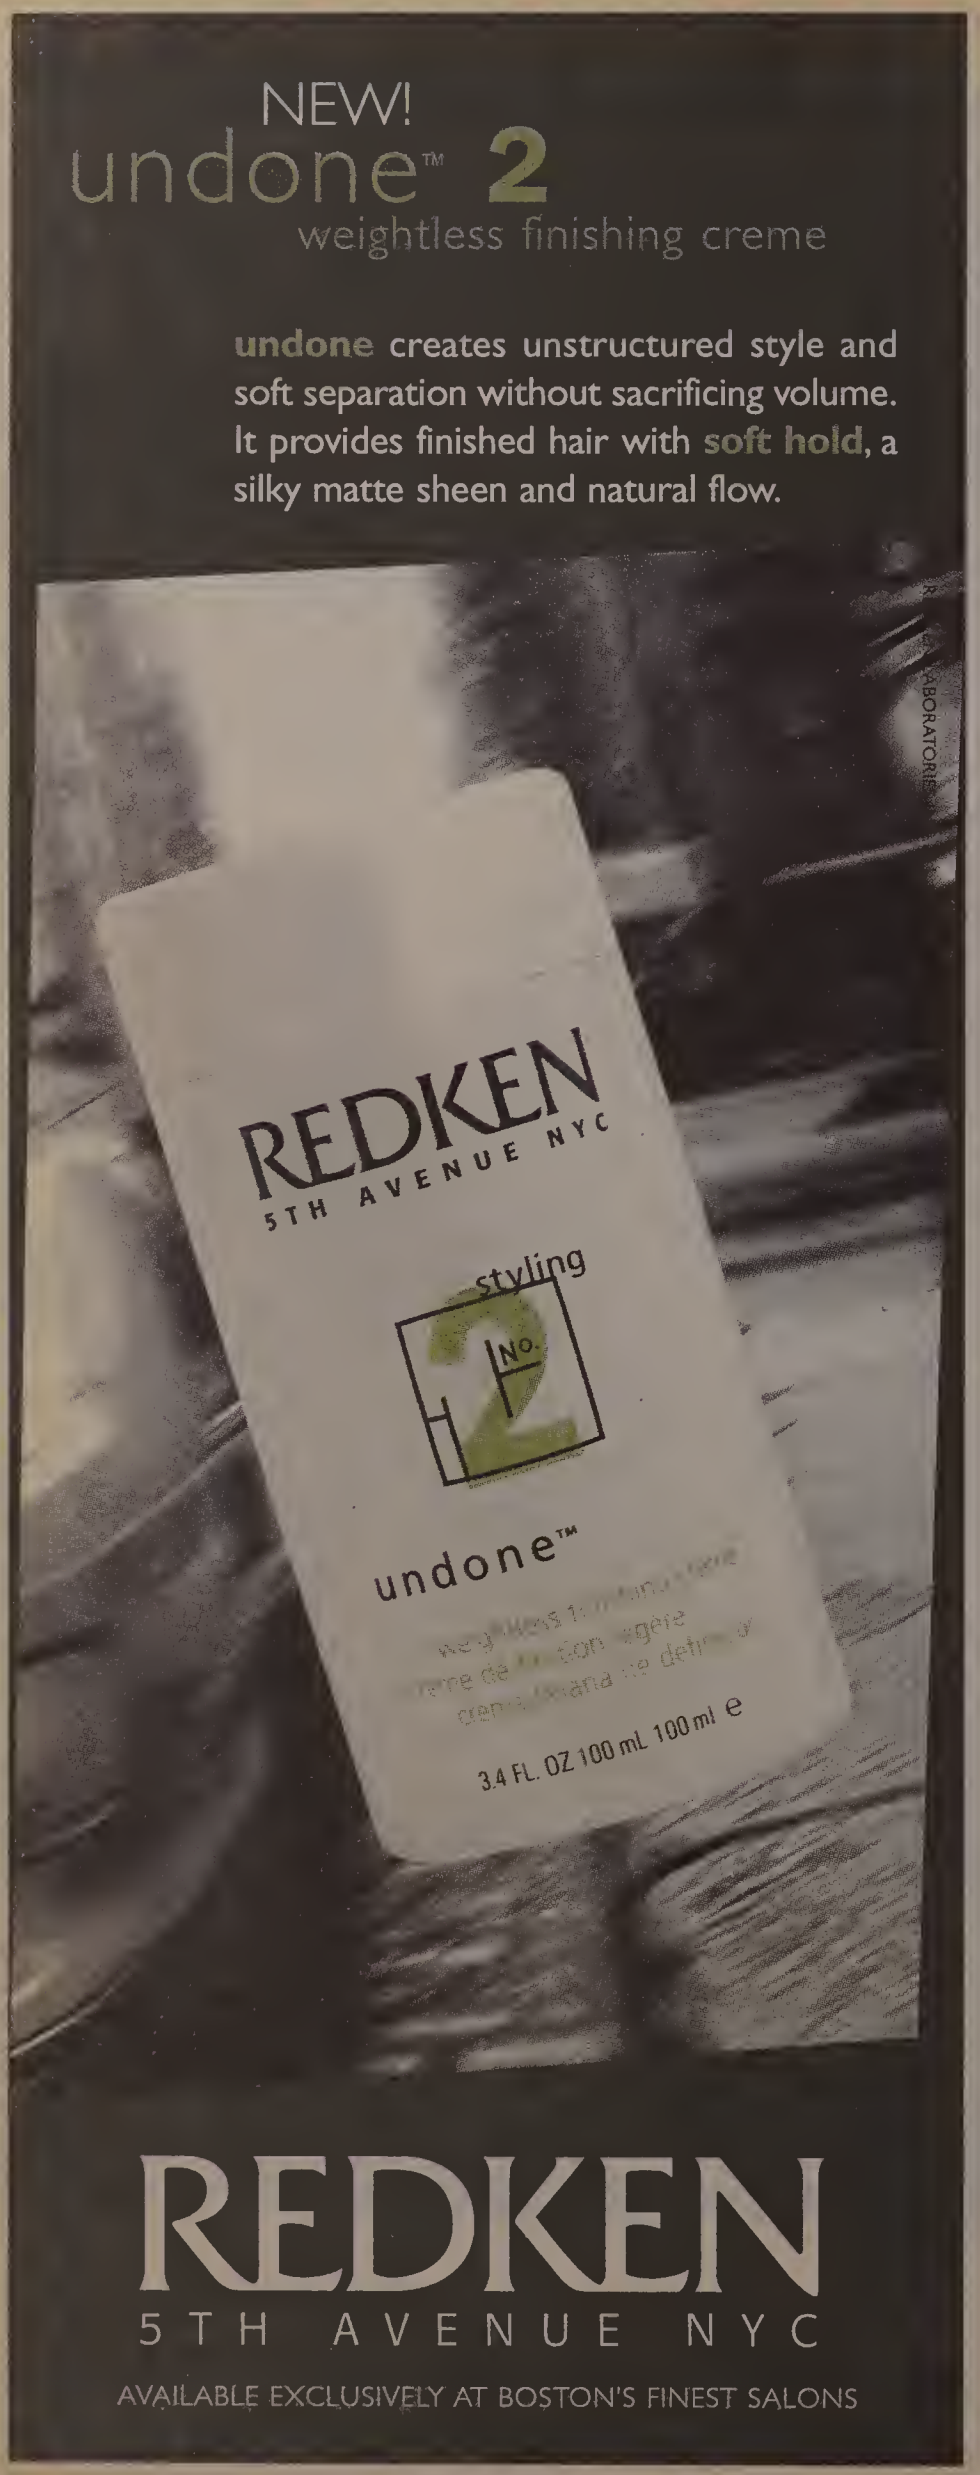
"All bars have to do food now in order to survive. A lot didn't due that in the past," says proprietor Michael Sherlock, who has also managed two other financial district mainstays, the Black Rose and Mr. Dooley's. "Also, food follows the beer, and the beer quality has gone way up in recent years," he adds, referring to the current microbrew and wine bar rage.

Entertainment is also becoming standard. A year or so ago, most establishments were lucky if they had a d.j. or occasional pub band. Only Il Panino Trattoria offered a wide variety of music and dancing. Now after-work patrons have a choice of live music including alternative, folk, Celtic, jazz and blues.



"It's the bands that are [our] secret to surviving at night," says The Times owner Frank Delaney, who has been concentrating on bringing in name alternative talent into his art-bedecked neo-Celtic bar on Broad Street, the site of the former Ayer's Rock. "You need bands that are recognizable, that people know."

Meanwhile, the neighborhood's most elegant new establishment, The Exchange, has been following in the footsteps of another famous institution, Locke-Ober. Opened last July with former Locke-Ober chef Jam Navara gracing its kitchens, the restaurant has been carefully cultivating its reputation as a Stork Club for the '90s.



In keeping with its James Bond image, The Exchange in February opened a members-only club that will provide breakfast, lunch and dinner service, along with a cigar bar, billiards room and esteemed wine cellar. Membership dues begin at about $2,000. The club is expected to appeal particularly to fast-track financial types as a place to close business deals or do a bit of networking.

In addition to viewing the financial district as a veritable goldmine, restauratcurs have other more mundane reasons for choosing to locate there.

"From an initial investment standpoint, it's much more expensive to get started in the South End or the Back Bay," says The Vault's Fortuna, adding that she and Seager passed on several sites around the city before locating their fashionable wine bar in Liberty Square on Milk Street, the site of the former Goodfellas.

The uninamed Harry, who runs The Exchange

"You have to buy a license from an existing business there, which is more expensive, and the local [residents'] neighborhood associations can put up a fight...for things like licenses, signage, valet parking," says Fortuna, of the Back Bay. She adds that because of the critical mass of bars, pubs and restaurants there and in the South End, "It's also harder to get your name out, to land a niche."

"People are running out of good locations in the South End and Back Bay. Also, there's an extremely well-heeled clientele in the financial district, and they're willing to pay," notes Moucef Meddeb, founder of L'Espalier, who in November opened Le Midi at International Place. "There're enough lawyers and finance types around who make it a hobby to enjoy dinner and good wine."

The Elephant & Castle has an even more blatant reason for choosing the financial district.

"For one, we're publicly traded on Nasdaq and it's good for our profile," says Mike Riley, manager of Elephant, a Canadian restaurant/pub chain that has become quite a hit since opening in November on Devonshire Street. "We cater toward that clientele. We fit that niche of stockbrokers and bankers."

But despite high hopes, the financial district still has an uphill battle before it becomes the new place to be seen. Il Panino's phenomenal success was not repeated by its sibling restaurant, 21 Broad, which was closed for several months this past fall. The restaurant, which had been the second stop on the gingerbread trail of seven Il Paninos that leads from the flagship on Franklin Street back to the mothership in the North End, was sold this winter to one of Il Panino's original partners, Jack Gateman, but has yet to reopen.

"We surrounded 21 Broad by [the Il Paninos at] Fanueil Hall and Franklin Street. They were too close to each other, so we decided to stick with the two best," says DePasquale, unconcerned, it appears, that because of the sale, patrons will no longer be able to hop on one foot from one Il Panino to the next.

And then there's the Marquee, a Sonsie-styled restaurant on High Street that closed in November after less than a year in business. Though the arty trattoria enjoyed a vibrant lunch trade, the venue was virtually deserted by seven o'clock. By the time it closed, the restaurant was so short of cash that it had to put up its liquor license as collateral for its business loans with Fleet Bank and had a lien placed on it by its janitorial company. Its death was sudden and ignoble.

"A lot of people here were chuckling when one day, we saw a handwritten sign up there on the door saying they were closed because of water damage relating to the Big Dig," says a reporter for the Boston Business Journal, which has its offices above the failed Marquee space. "After a week, everyone was wondering what type of water damage it could be, especially because the lights were all on...Then, a month later, down came the sign about water damage and up went one about the place having a lien on it."

The cautionary tale of the Marquee still haunts the district's restaurateurs. Le Midi's Meddeb, who can look out from his restaurant at the Marquee's darkened windows, says that the close concerned him to the point where he is reluctant to run a seven days a week dinner service. Nevertheless, Meddeb says he is planning to offer full dinner service on Thursday nights beginning this month.

"I was a little disappointed. I wanted them to make it, because when any restaurant closes, even my own 21 Broad, it hurts the area," says Il Panino's DePasquale.

But the Marquee's blues haven't scared everyone off High Street. Undaunted, restaurateur Joe Lopez has relocated his popular Joseph's Aquarium from Atlantic Avenue to the site of the late Marquee at 200 High Street. The seafood emporium reopened its door in early April. Area restaurateurs say they are pleased to see an experienced operator like Lopez move into the Marquee's glamorous digs.

Another cloud over the financial district has been the Big Dig, which has turned much of the area into an interminable maze of jersey barriers and flying debris. Ironically, it is precisely the Big Dig that has lured many entrepreneurs to the area. If the project goes according to plan, the mudflat that currently engulfs Atlantic Avenue and Surface Road will be turned into a pristine, waterfront park within three years time. It doesn't take much business imagination to envision that park filled with frolicking tourists and leisurely locals, sort of a Quincy Market II.

"When that is a park, no one will be able to buy down here," says The Times' Delaney, as he points toward the muddy craters that now make up the end of High Street, where The Times sits patiently. "It could be the same boom like we saw at North Station with the FleetCenter."

"Once the Artery's over, this will be the area. I thought of this four years ago," says Il Panino's DePasquale. "If the new restaurants can hold on that long, they'll absolutely do well." ✦

Changing Your Mind ISN'T PAINLESS

THE ULTRA-HIGH TECH FIELD OF LASER TATTOO AND HAIR REMOVAL

I THOUGHT IT WAS A GREAT IDEA AT THE time. I didn't even think getting the tattoo etched on my shoulder hurt. I hated the whiny, buzzing noise the needle made, but I just kept talking to the artist about god knows what to keep my mind off that awful sound.

Now I hate it.

I got it at 22 years old with a boyfriend who went on to prefer racing sailboats and racy blondes. (Unfortunately, he lived with me, which made the blondes a bit of a problem.) He designed it, and it's still on his shoulder too. After six years of seeing it every time I get out of the shower, having it peek out when I wear open collars, and being completely unable to wear an evening dress that doesn't cover it like a suit of armor, I'm woman enough to admit that I hate it. I wince every time the mirror throws it back at me, the yin/yang symbol and the sky blue of the—I am cringing as I write this—dolphins. Yes, dolphins. I have a stupid tattoo of dolphins, the animal more girls get tattooed on themselves than any other, on my right shoulder.

I also have to admit further stupidity on my part and tell you that my right ankle is covered in flowers. Not Holly Hobbie flowers (thank gawd), but a dark, shadowy garden of ancient blooms. It would look great, on anybody else. It's just not me, which is not something you can say halfway through the tattooing. (It was also something I realized halfway through the tattooing, that same sinking feeling I had when I was halfway down the aisle the first time. But that's another article entirely.) I can wear skirts, as long as I'm also wearing boots to cover it up.

One fine recent day, I looked in the mirror and said, "Honey, they've GOT to go."

I phoned a laser "spa" that specializes in tattoo removal. "Spa" makes it sound so relaxing, like I'll get a massage and manicure once the "procedure" is over. I should for the price. This recovery of my shoulder, ankle and some of my still-wounded pride will not come cheap.

"Were they professionally done?" I was asked by the soft-spoken Claire, who had the peaceful voice of someone who has never made such a stupid move in her life. "Definitely," I replied, hoping that this was a positive aspect. At least it wasn't like that kid in the eighth grade who tattooed a satanic symbol on his forearm with a needle and India ink. Of course, he went to reform school. I wasn't so subject to supervision to keep me from needles. "Oh. That means the ink could be very deep. It could take one, two or more treatments." Oh. At more than $300 a pop, this was not the best news I'd had in a while. She also told me insurance doesn't cover it. I wouldn't go to a doctor unless it was life or death, or at least extreme long-term misery, and I was considering spending this much money on my skin?

Vanity is a cruel mistress, and she's getting more expensive every year.

"Why don't you come in for a consultation tomorrow?" Tomorrow made it seem one day closer to tattoos being gone, as if the laser was a big pink gummy eraser and it would just rub the page clean, leaving my skin "a little whitish." I'm Irish and I look like I've never seen the sun. In high school, when the Cure became huge, I looked Goth without even trying. When I traveled no one ever believed I lived in California. An extremely white shoulder free of marine life would be fine. A bare ankle would be fabulous. Maybe I could even wear—gasp—a sleeveless shirt! Spaghetti straps! Gucci stiletto heels! I took the appointment. Getting rid of them now seems as great an idea as getting it put on in the first place. If only I had just pierced my belly button instead.

THE FIRST TREATMENT

As my "laserspa" doctor entered the room where I waited, I realized for the first time how nice it is to meet a doctor while A. you are dressed and B. not at some charity cocktail party. Then he opened his mouth. This doctor did not want to answer technical questions, even though he knew I was writing an article to document the process. He had the personality of driftwood, never smiled once and then told me I was looking at six-12 separate treatments. Remember the nice nurse I had visited just a few weeks ago? She was either on ether or the whole place just lies to get you started on the program, then assumes you'll shell out the additional moola because you've got a half-gone tattoo.

Okay, so here I was, branded by ink I didn't want anymore and realizing I had been conned into sitting on this doctor's slime-green table. There were two laser machines next to me, one for hair removal (which the doctor posed as "A great success rate," and told me the other lasers are "terrible, their data is just terrible") and one just for me and the rest of the unwantedly branded world. There were also cool Godzilla-movie era pink-red goggles for me and the doctor to wear to protect our eyes from the laser. I felt better when I saw the Japanamation goggles, but the idea of paying 12 x $325 just for ONE of the tattoos to go away? I was definitely queasy.

"It's going to feel like a HOT rubberband snapping against your skin," said the doc in his Bert from Sesame Street voice. Who in the hell HEATS rubberbands? Actually, he looks just like Bert—YEEEOOOOOCH! Ack! This first stab with the laser, and every single one for the next 15 minutes hurt more than getting the blasted tattoo. More than breaking a wrist. Repeatedly. I realized why he'd said a "HOT" rubber band. I still couldn't figure out who heated rubberbands, and I was thinking hard to ignore the pain.

When finally I had been tortured like the best of spies, I looked up. My tattoo was covered in tiny, pebble-sized white mushroom clouds rimmed in tattoo ink. I couldn't see my tattoo at all! I was horrified at the Chernobyl look but delighted. Even Dr. Bert said it looked really good for a first treatment. He still didn't smile, though.

I then found the clinic administrator and told her how different the time and cost estimates from my consultation with the nurse before my visit were from the ones received today. She looked shocked, was very friendly and promised me she would make sure future consultations were more realistic.

Then I had to face the boyfriend that night and show it to him. I unwrapped the bandage, thinking we were going to see the same strange white explosion. My tattoo, now possessing a mind all its own, had returned, with every line and curve blurred by purple and blood! It was disgusting. It set my boyfriend laughing for a good 10 minutes.

"Whaddya pay for THAT? Why don't we just put a cigar against it? Even Cubans aren't this expensive! Nice tattoo-hahahahahaha howl howl, etc. etc." You've had a partner, you get the idea. They know your weak spots.

It is almost six weeks later, the duration you have to languish in a gory state between treatments. The tattoo looked like something Marilyn Manson would want on his ankle for three weeks, then faded to a lighter shade than it had been, still intact. Time for round two, with another laser clinic to see what else is available out there (so that you don't have to shop around like I am).

After learning only one major hospital in Boston does laser tattoo or hair removal, and it's one I won't name because everyone I asked about it called the place a "nightmare," I decided to try another "salon." As these six weeks passed and people asked me about the process, I realized every woman I spoke with about it wanted to know much more about the hair removal aspect. I decided to investigate both on my second laser tour stop.

Eric Smith is the disconcertingly young and handsome owner of Total Skin Care, another Boston salon that does laser tattoo and hair removal. Since everyone has hair and not all of us are stupid enough to get tattoos we didn't really want, hair removal is more popular. Total Skin Care uses one laser for both treatments, called the Epitouch, and Eric showed me how the procedure for both hair and tattoo zapping is done, using a topical numbing and then an additional cooling gel (which is basically the gel they use in ultrasound tests) to ease the pain (I already like this place) and a plastic grid to "shoot" the laser through, to ensure that every 6mm of skin is evenly covered.

This is math paying off.

The math of payments is easier here, also. I'm now looking at fewer total treatments and a much lower cost, both of the laser time and the overall total. The atmosphere is completely the opposite of the first clinic I tried. Here, at a lower cost, is the very cozy salon/spa setting. "We want to make this as easy as possible for people to get," Smith explains when I remark on the prices. "This should be accessible to everyone." (Note: It is not terribly successful on darker complexions, because the laser targets the pigment of the tattoo or hair. In darker skin tones the laser is "confused" and can miss the hair. It can also damage the skin, leaving whitish spots. Not the desired effect at all.)

Smith also tells me that the hair removal possibilities by laser were discovered by doctors removing tattoos and finding that no hair returned when the tattoo was gone. Since the hair removal laser has been on the general market (one year) Smith and others in the profession report great results, with three treatments sometimes stopping the hair growth seemingly completely, an enormous benefit over any other method. The caveat emptor: Long-term effects are still unknown, the longest-treated people only at 12 or 13 months.

Total Skin Care's longest running client is at eight months of treatments. Of course, some of us will jump right in anyway, so here goes treatment number two, and a patch test for hair removal.

Funny, this is just like tattooing: once you get started you just want more.

TREATMENT TWO

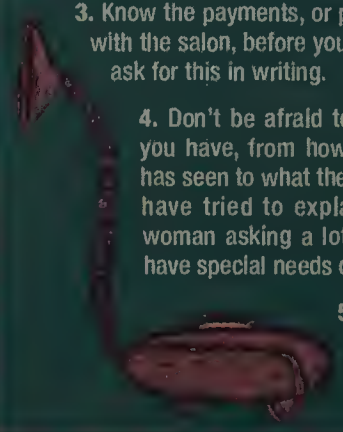
Dr. Casanova is my laser doctor this time. He finds a small patch on my arm and, with a laser that hurts much less than the tattoo remover, zaps a small area and explains how hair removal works. The costs are high: You could, if you wanted to remove most major areas women are concerned about, look at $9,000 for a year's worth of treatments and touch-ups.

The process, though, to me was less painful than other methods of hair removal and works like this: The red laser light penetrates the skin and is absorbed by pigment located in the hair follicle. As you may be already thinking, there is less pigment in blonde and red hair, meaning these are hair colors that don't respond as well as dark hair. (Another group of women not as well served by the laser to this date.) The hair can be eliminated in as few as three treatments, or possibly more than six.

The tattoo removal we are now familiar with: The laser and my fading ankle ink. With the numbing topical ointment and then the gel on the tattoo before the laser, the pain is diminished almost in half. Being more comfortable in a more "salon" setting with a padded salon table to sit on instead of the classic doctor's table certainly could have helped. I left in far less pain and much happier with my second treatment. This tattoo is a tough customer, though. I can see I'm looking beyond three treatments. I don't know how many more. I just keep saying it'll be worth it. ✦

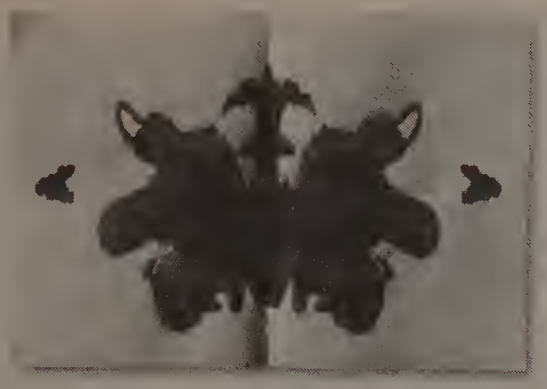
BEFORE BEING ZAPPED

FOR THOSE CONTEMPLATING HAIR OR TATTOO REMOVAL BY LASER, I STRONGLY RECOMMEND LOOKING THOROUGHLY INTO THE FOLLOWING BEFORE DECIDING ON A PLACE TO BE TREATED.



1. Go in for a consultation, talk exactly about what you want removed and get the realistic opinion from the doctor on how many treatments. Ask for this in WRITING. I cannot stress this enough.

2. Make sure the person wielding the laser is an M.D. with appropriate training in laser treatments and techniques. Do not settle for a "supervising" doctor, which is legal in Massachusetts. When you are ready to be zapped, your "supervising" M.D. may only be on the premises, not even in the room. You want the M.D. in the unusual case that anything should go wrong, or if you are taking medicines that could interfere with the treatment. This is laser "surgery" and only the M.D. is qualified to answer questions that would need long-term study. An electrologist may be excellent at the process but still is not a physician.



3. Know the payments, or plan out a payment schedule with the salon, before you have anything lasered. Also ask for this in writing.

4. Don't be afraid to ask every single question you have, from how many patients this doctor has seen to what the laser is doing to your skin. I have tried to explain what I learned as one woman asking a lot of questions, but you may have special needs or concerns.

5. Shop around. Do not settle for the first price you hear or the hype a large salon, clinic or spa can feed you.

ASKED THE SAME LIST OF QUESTIONS, these buff and beefy, svelt and shapely men and women revealed their daily, weekly or non-existent workout secrets.

WHAT IS YOUR WORKOUT?

H. Campion: Can I lie? This is so embarrassing. All right then, I run two miles, three to four days a week. My weight training is lifting my children, ages five and seven. In fact I only started running when I had my first child.

C. Campion: Three times a week I work out at the BAC [Boston Athletic Club] on the stairmaster and treadmill, and that fancy 'nordic track' thing that makes you work harder than the original one.

Costa: It all depends if I have an endurance event planned for the year, like a triathlon or a marathon. One year I wanted to enter a boxing match so I trained for eight weeks in the ring. Otherwise, I pretty much run or play tennis every day. Something, every day.

Dunlap: I work out five times a week; twice in Pilates [a form of strength conditioning] twice at dance. I teach yoga, I swim two miles twice a week, and two weight circuits. Each workout is about 1.5 hours. Oh, that's more than five times, isn't it? (Sure is.)

Storin: I'm very dull on this. I've done the same thing three days a week for 27 years. I run, about three miles, same route, same time—early in the morning, with my dog. Takes about 25 minutes.

Mace: I work out at the gym three times a week, and have two six-hour practice sessions a week with the team. In those six hours we run laps, go through 20 or so cheer routines, and a series of tri-dips, push ups, sit ups and a bunch of other toning and strengthening exercises. It's a long day and you don't look very pretty after a Saturday workout, but still, I feel great, especially during the summer when we work out on the field in the sun. A lot of the girls will even go out dancing after the practice that night. I love it.

Moulter: How'dja find me? I'm not some hardbody. Never going to be. I'm an Italian kid who weighted 198 lbs. at birth and it's been downhill from there. (But Larry, the workout?) Five times a week I do 30 minutes on the treadmill over at the BAC, three times a week I use the weights, sometimes a combo of the two. I like the variety.

Mleczko: I practice with the team every day, then weight train three days a week in addition to that. A lot of pull ups, tri-dips, front squats with a 95 lb. bar, stuff like that. Then I'll hop on the bike to kind of even things out. (That all?)

Friedman: As little as I can, and only when my wife makes me.

Walker: I'm a fanatic. I have a workout room in my basement that I'm very proud of...I work out on a weight machine three times a week, run on the treadmill three times a week for 30-40 minutes, and I walk my dog, Max, at a vigorous pace every morning.

Zakim: I work out every day. Forty-five minutes on the treadmill, three times a week I weightlift with bar bells. If I work out with my trainer, it's an hour with the weights. Otherwise 30-40 minutes.

WHEN IT COMES TO EXERCISE, WOULD YOU CONSIDER YOURSELF AVERAGE, UNDER-AVERAGE OR OBSESSED?

C. Campion: I would never call myself obsessed.

Costa: Obsessed. In fact if I don't work out every day I don't feel right, I'm grumpy and sluggish. It's weird, I've been at it since I was a teen. Matty [Siegel] makes fun of me because when I go on vacation I call ahead to make sure it's a place with a great health club. Or I don't go. In fact while my wife is relaxing, doing her thing on vacation, I'm lying on the beach thinking about my workout in the gym, or taking a run, or playing tennis. Tennis! Even that! I don't play to win, I play for the workout.

H. Campion: Under-average and a disappointment to myself.

Dunlap: In exercise there are two schools of thought. One sees exercise as a chore and finds any reason not to do it. The other feels that if they don't exercise, their body and psyche rebel. I'm on that side of the fence. I'm not a fanatic, but I love to move my body. It's integral to my day.

Zakim: Rationally obsessed. I began working out when I was getting ready for my bone marrow transplant in March of 1996. To me it's a very important part of dealing with cancer. Strength is just another part of my treatment. Psychologically it's empowering me to deal with the disease. Often the treatment leaves me sick and depressed, and working out helps counter that.

Friedman: Average.

Walker: Close to obsessed. I'm reaching my midlife crisis, but I do let it go for two days a week, so I'm not totally obsessed, yet. But in stressful times, I exercise every day. It's a drug, working out.

Storin: Way under-obsessed.

DO YOU LOVE, HATE, OR TOLERATE IT?

Mace: Love.

Walker: I have a love/hate relationship with it. When I am on the machines, I hate it, it's so boring. But if I don't do it, I feel horrible.

Costa: Love.

H. Campion: I love it when I'm done.

Friedman: Tolerate. Listen, I don't like organized working out, training. I prefer to do something rigorous, more playful, like tennis, skiing, horseback riding. I love activity but I hate training. The only way I can stand the stationary bike is with a headset and the TV on.

Dunlap: Love. I love to use my body.

Mleczko: Love/hate with the weight training. When I started training with [strength and conditioning coach] Mike Boyle he must have cringed; I couldn't do a single pull up. But now I love the way it makes me feel and perform.

WHERE DOES IT RANK ON YOUR LIST OF PRIORITIES?

H. Campion: In my head, very high. In practice, it's the first to go.

Costa: That's a dangerous one. It's very high, it's a real priority.

Dunlap: Fairly high. It's the second or third thing I schedule each day.

Friedman: Low. In fact if I don't do it first thing, I don't do it at all.

Walker: Near the top. My son is at the top, and after that is exercise.

Mace: Right up there. Family is first. Then teaching. Then the workout.

WHAT IS YOUR BIGGEST EXCUSE NOT TO EXERCISE?

Friedman: Every excuse.

Costa: I don't have any.

Mace: Hmmm, let's flip through the file. If I'm feeling drained, I'll take a day off. Some days, 25 fifth graders can just be too much and I'll say 'no way.' But I am my own worst critic. I'm very competitive, and if I don't feel that I look good, I get bothered. I like to look a certain way. And the better I look the better I feel.

Dunlap: Travel is not an excuse but often it presents a problem. But even then, I do calf raises while sitting on the plane, isometric exercises, and I also go back and stretch and chat with the stewardesses. In fact, I usually end up giving them a mini instruction.

Walker: My schedule. By the end of the week I'm exhausted, so if I ever need an excuse, that is the first one I use.

Zakim: If I'm too sick.

Storin: Achy bones, then I talk myself out of it, saying it's not good to run every day.

WHAT IS YOUR BIGGEST INSPIRATION TO EXERCISE?

C. Campion: Health

Moulter: Getting old.

Mleczko: My greatest inspiration is that I don't want to be the one who lets the team down. We are all in this together; I don't want to be the one who causes us to lose. I love hockey and want to be the best player I can be.

Friedman: Fear of getting fat.

Dunlap: Being able to move is a huge motivator. People don't pay close enough attention to their bodies and how they move. They're satisfied with shuffling along. I like the feeling of not having any aches or pains. I also like the way it looks.

CARLA DUNLAP

Zakim: Survival.
Costa: Umm, umm, umm, umm, I guess I don't think about a workout like most people—it's just a part of my life. I don't do it for any means or end. I do it for how it makes me feel and it makes me feel great. If I'm exhausted and have the choice between a nap or workout I choose the workout every time.

DO YOU HAVE A PHYSICAL IDEAL? SOMEONE YOU ARE STRIVING TO LOOK LIKE?
H. Campion: Princess Diana.
Walker: Tina Turner. If I could look and feel like that as I approach 60, I'll take it.
Mace, Moulter, Zakim, Friedman: No.
Storin: My 14-year-old son.
Mleczko: Not really. I'm pretty tall, but I don't want to look like a skinny runway model. I refuse to give up eating to do that.

ANY INJURIES?
H. Campion: I don't work out enough to get injured, I'm afraid.
C. Campion: Ditto.
Costa: I had a hernia surgery—but it wasn't workout related, torn rotator cuff from tennis, I'm presently nursing a chronic tennis elbow, shin splints from the time I did 10 marathons in a year....
Dunlap: I started to feel back spasms from the pressure on my spine from the weightlifting. I found Pilates and belly dancing help lengthen and strengthen instead.
Walker: Both of my knees are bad. In fact I started training on the machine after I had worn through the cartilage in both knees, which put me on crutches for a month.
Mace: A broken nose when one of the mounts in a cheer fell on me and broke it. But because it didn't bleed the coach kept me in the game. Later in the game it happened again, and required surgery to fix.
Storin: Weak ankles.
Friedman: Lots. Broken neck, dislocated shoulder, missing ACL. Lots.

WERE YOU A COLLEGE ATHLETE?
H. & C. Campion, Walker, Moulter, Storin: No.
Mace: I cheered in college, and have been with the Patriots since college. I never played on a team sport, although I work out with 40 women now.
Mleczko: Technically, I still am a hockey player for Harvard.
Zakim: I played intramural football.
Friedman: Skied at Dartmouth, coached skiing at Harvard as well as downhill raced on the national circuit [thus the catalog of injuries].

IF YOU DIDN'T NEED TO EXERCISE FOR WEIGHT OR HEALTH REASONS, WOULD YOU?
H. & C. Campion: (Yet again) No.
Moulter: Yes, I would for the mental benefits. I'm not in this for the cosmetics. I'm in it for the future benefits.
Dunlap: Probably. I came from an active family and was always a tomboy. Also, I find it a joy to move.
Friedman: No.
Walker: Yes. It's my anti-stress drug, and I feel so much better when I do it.
Mace: I love aerobics and would do them no matter what. It's a blast, but the weightlifting is a chore.
Storin: Yes, I would. I feel better. It gives me a chance to think things through.
Zakim: Now, I would exercise without the incentive of disease, sure. But my exercise is not like a New Year's resolution. It's one of my tools of survival, along with acupuncture, massage therapy and the cancer treatment, to strengthen the mind and body. When I exercise, I feel like I'm taking back my life.

WHAT IS YOUR JUNK FOOD OF CHOICE AND UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES DO YOU BINGE?
Dunlap: You would have to ask about junk food, wouldn't you? I have a good and a bad junk food. The good is Boston Lite Popcorn, but my bad is very light tiramisu. I just love it. I have pizza probably twice a year so whenever I eat at Bertucci's—they make a wonderful tiramisu—or there's a place in Reading that makes fabulous tiramisu. That's my junk food.
Storin: I don't have any particular addiction to a kind of junk food, nor do I really eat much of it. But I have no will power if I actually see it in front of me. It might be cheese and crackers, or cookies, peanuts or M&Ms—which my son left lying around recently.
Mace: Anything under the sun that's sweet, I love. I don't have one particular junk food that I constantly snack on, I just love anything that's fattening. Potatoes made any way, cheesecake, donuts, cookies—everything bad for you, I love, and I eat it right after either weigh-ins or something big like tryouts, when you've been working out really hard for a long time and go out for Chinese food that night and order a dessert. The whole nine yards. That's me, just everything....
Walker: Crunch 'n' Munch. And when I indulge, if I indulge, it's during the weekend.
Costa: Hmmm, I'm thinking pizza. Is that a junk food? No wait! I got it. Cheez-Its. Definitely. I can't have them in the house.

EVER DREAM OF BEING A STAR? IF SO, WHAT SPORT, WHAT TEAM?
Zakim: As a kid I dreamed of playing center field for the New York Yankees.
H. & C. Campion, Mace, Moulter: No.
Friedman: Actually, I was closer to being a [skiing] star than dreaming about it but I wasn't good enough. I raced, and I was pretty good.
Storin: No, but I would have liked to play defensive back for Notre Dame [where he went to college].
Dunlap: A lot of people don't know that I actually won the gold and bronze medals in synchronized swimming before I started weightlifting.
Walker: Women's basketball, but I would want to play for the Celtics.
Costa: It's a toss up between the NHL and playing in the finals at the US Open. In fact I want my ashes spread over the Open final—I want my death to be a messy day for everybody. ✦

Agenda

Improper choices for weeks of May 6 - May 19

Wednesday MAY 6

Taylor Made
Folk singer James Taylor joins forces with Keith Lockhart and the Boston Pops for the opening night concert of the 1998 season. Appearances by Mary Chapin Carpenter, Arlo Guthrie and Sarah Jessica Parker (of all people) are also scheduled. Call 638-9280 for additional information.

Thursday MAY 7

Am I Making You Horny Baby?
If I'm not, then the funky brass stylings of Heavy Metal Horns most definitely will. Check out this pseudo-big band at the Paradise. Call the Paradise Box Office for tickets at 562-8800.

Heavy Metal Horns at the Paradise

Friday MAY 8

Mama Mia!
I know you love Italian food (and Italians too! Wink-Wink) so tonight is a perfect time to head over to the New England Aquarium as it hosts the Fifth annual "A Taste of the North End" from 7:30 to 11:30 pm. Scads of different restaurants will be attending. To reserve tickets call 742-4336.

Saturday MAY 9

Eating Picasso
Actually the Picasso's, Monet's or Degas' are edible. That's right, edible—as in the Fifth annual Edible Art benefit at Shreve, Crump & Low (330 Boylston Street) 27 Boston chefs will create culinary masterpieces in honor of their favorite work of art or artist.

Sunday MAY 10

Mom's The Word
Yes, today is Mother's Day. Spend some time with the woman who gave birth to you, fed you, changed your stinky diaper and made you breakfast after your first hangover. The Photo Resource Center at BU hosts a Mother's Day Portrait Extravaganza. Bring your mommy and get a portrait taken with her. For more info call 353-0700.

Kissinger comes to Boston

Monday MAY 11

Oh Henry
Nobel Peace Prize recipient and ex-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger comes to town to be the guest speaker at "An Evening Of Commitment To Peace." Acting Gov Paul Cellucci and Mayor Menino will be on hand as well at the Seaport Hotel at the World Trade Center. For more info. call 455-6504.

Tuesday MAY 12

Voices Carry
Authors Danzy Senna and Edwidge Danticat read from their published works at the third annual Rhythm & Voices benefit at 7 pm at Karma Club. Proceeds will benefit Women Express, Inc—publishers of Teen Voices magazine. For more information call 426-5505. 9 Lansdowne Street.

Author Danzy Senna

Wednesday MAY 13

One If By Land
Venture over to Charlestown's Warren Tavern to throw a couple of brews back and cavort with all the other friendly people who come to this great place that once served Paul Revere among other notable Patriots. Wednesday's are the best night of the week to show up and party, cat and be merry. 2 Pleasant Street, 241-8142.

Thursday MAY 14

See Dick
Actually see Jerry, Kramer, George and Elaine as they bid adieu to the boob-tube's best contemporary sit-com. Don't miss the festivities at Dick's Last Resort, which hosts a Seinfeld's Last Stand party that includes a look-a-like contest, discussions of famous episodes (my fave's "The Bubble Boy") and, of course, watch Jerry say farewell.

Friday MAY 15

Dance Dance Dance
Tonight is a good night to go see the White Oak Dance Project featuring legendary dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov at BankBoston's Celebrity Series at The Shubert Theatre at 8 pm. For more information call 482-2595. 265 Tremont Street.

Watch Baryshnikov dance the night away

Saturday MAY 16

Party On
At Earth Night: A Party for the Planet, hosted by the Environmental League of Massachusetts. You can check out the sounds of jazz great Herb Pomeroy as well as food and drink from Legal Sea Foods and Sam Adams. At the State House, starting at 7 pm.

Sunday MAY 17

The Ride Of Your Life
Could actually help save someone else's. The fourth annual (bike) Ride For Research raises money for the Brain Tumor Society and starts today at 9:30 am in Waltham. Bring your Cannondale and help a good cause. Contact the Brain Tumor Society at 800-770-8287 for more information.

Monday MAY 18

A Real Wild One
Okay So Woody Allen isn't that wild. But his private life is. Check out Wild Man Blues, Barbara Kopple's documentary film about both Allen's jazz band and his personal life. Wild Man Blues plays only one week (through May 21) at the Brattle Theatre. 40 Brattle Street, Cambridge. 876-6837.

Tuesday MAY 19

Noise
It's won four Tony Awards. It brought a tap resurgence to the stage. Now Bring In 'da Noise, Bring In 'da Funk hits Boston's Shubert Theatre. Check out the tap dancing—as well as the noise and the funk. Tickets are available through Telecharge at 800-447-7400.

Portrait Of The Artist

Natallya Bregel's paintings—like the 1994 portrait above titled "In the Hallway"—exhibit the vivid and realistic world of people she knows. Whether it be reading tarot cards or playing the violin, her work explores the personal relationship she has with her subjects, each painted in their own familiar environment. Bregel's drawings and paintings can be seen at Gallery 57, 57 Inman Street, 2nd floor, Cambridge, through May 28.

To Mother...with Love

There're always tons of delightful events in Boston to do with mom on her special day. Here are just a few ideas:

• THE ANNUAL DUCKLINGS DAY PARADE Takes place at 1 pm on Boston Common across from the State House. Inspired by the Robert McCloskey children's story, Make Way for Ducklings, this parade—led by the Harvard Marching Band and followed by thousands of cute, little kids—is sure to make your mom smile.

• CANTATA SINGERS IN CONCERT At the New England Conservatory's Jordan Hall on May 8 at 8 pm or May 10 at 3 pm (30 Gainsborough Street), take advantage of a special that allows your mom to get in to the show for half the price (we trust you'll pick up the other half).

• THE ACTON JAZZ CAFE On May 10, for one seating only at 1 pm, holds a special jazz lunch—with chef Kim creating culinary delights (yes, that means dessert too) and live entertainment by Sai Ghose and Jerry Wilfong.

• SWAN LAKE INSPIRED BRUNCH BUFFET At The Boston Park Plaza Hotel (64 Arlington Street) in Cafe Rouge and afternoon tea in Swan's Court. See ice sculptures adorning a lavish buffet featuring carving stations, made-to-order omelets and other good stuff.

• OLD STURBRIDGE VILLAGE Celebrates Mother's Day the old fashion way—literally. On May 10 from 9 am to 5 pm visitors can learn about the dilemmas and joys of motherhood long ago by hearing Lydia Maria Child, author of The Mother's Book, read. Also enjoy a lunch with strolling musicians at the Bullard Tavern. For more information call 508-347-3362 extension 325.

Aldara™ (IMIQUIMOD) Cream, 5%

Brief Summary—Consult package insert for full prescribing information.

DESCRIPTION

Aldara™ is the brand name for imiquimod which is an immune response modifier. Each gram of the 5% cream contains 50 mg of imiquimod in an off-white oil-in-water vanishing cream base.

INDICATIONS AND USAGE

Aldara 5% cream is indicated for the treatment of external genital and perianal warts/condyloma acuminata in adults.

CONTRAINDICATIONS

None known

WARNINGS

Aldara cream has not been evaluated for the treatment of urethral, intra-vaginal, cervical, rectal, or intra-anal human papilloma viral disease and is not recommended for these conditions.

PRECAUTIONS

General

Local skin reactions such as erythema, erosion, excoriation/flaking, and edema are common. Should severe local skin reaction occur, the cream should be removed by washing the treatment area with mild soap and water. Treatment with Aldara cream can be resumed after the skin reaction has subsided. There is no clinical experience with Aldara cream therapy immediately following the treatment of genital/perianal warts with other cutaneously applied drugs; therefore, Aldara cream administration is not recommended until genital/perianal tissue is healed from any previous drug or surgical treatment. Aldara has the potential to exacerbate inflammatory conditions of the skin.

Information for Patients

Patients using Aldara 5% cream should receive the following information and instructions: The effect of Aldara 5% cream on the transmission of genital/perianal warts is unknown. Aldara 5% cream may weaken condoms and vaginal diaphragms. Therefore, concurrent use is not recommended.

1. This medication is to be used as directed by a physician. It is for external use only. Eye contact should be avoided.
2. The treatment area should not be bandaged or otherwise covered or wrapped as to be occlusive.
3. Sexual (genital, anal, oral) contact should be avoided while the cream is on the skin.
4. It is recommended that 6-10 hours following Aldara 5% cream application the treatment area be washed with mild soap and water.
5. It is common for patients to experience local skin reactions such as erythema, erosion, excoriation/flaking, and edema at the site of application or surrounding areas. Most skin reactions are mild to moderate. Severe skin reactions can occur and should be reported promptly to the prescribing physician.
6. Uncircumcised males treating warts under the foreskin should retract the foreskin and clean the area daily.
7. Patients should be aware that new warts may develop during therapy, as Aldara is not a cure.

Carcinogenicity, Mutagenesis, and Impairment of Fertility

Rodent carcinogenicity data are not available. Imiquimod was without effect in a series of eight different mutagenicity assays including Ames, mouse lymphoma, CHO chromosome aberration, human lymphocyte chromosome aberration, SHE cell transformation, rat and hamster bone marrow cytogenetics, and mouse dominant lethal test. Daily oral administration of imiquimod to rats, at doses up to 8 times the recommended human dose on a mg/m^2 basis throughout mating, gestation, parturition and lactation, demonstrated no impairment of reproduction.

Pregnancy

Pregnancy Category B: There are no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Imiquimod was not found to be teratogenic in rat or rabbit teratology studies. In rats at a high maternally toxic dose (28 times human dose on a mg/m^2 basis), reduced pup weights and delayed ossification were observed. In developmental studies with offspring of pregnant rats treated with imiquimod (8 times human dose), no adverse effects were demonstrated.

Nursing Mothers

It is not known whether topically applied imiquimod is excreted in breast milk.

Pediatric Use

Safety and efficacy in patients below the age of 18 years have not been established.

ADVERSE REACTIONS

In controlled clinical trials, the most frequently reported adverse reactions were those of local skin and application site reactions; some patients also reported systemic reactions. These reactions were usually mild to moderate in intensity; however, severe reactions were reported with 3X/week application. These reactions were more frequent and more intense with daily application than with 3X/week application. Overall, in the 3X/week application clinical studies, 1.2% (4/327) of the patients discontinued due to local skin/application site reactions. The incidence and severity of local skin reactions during controlled clinical trials are shown in the following table.

Remote site skin reactions were also reported in female and male patients treated 3X/week with imiquimod 5% cream. The severe remote site skin reactions reported for females were erythema (3%), ulceration (2%), and edema (1%); and for males, erosion (2%), and erythema, edema, induration, and excoriation/flaking (each 1%).

Adverse events judged to be probably or possibly related to Aldara reported by more than 5% of patients are listed below; also included are soreness, influenza-like symptoms and myalgia.

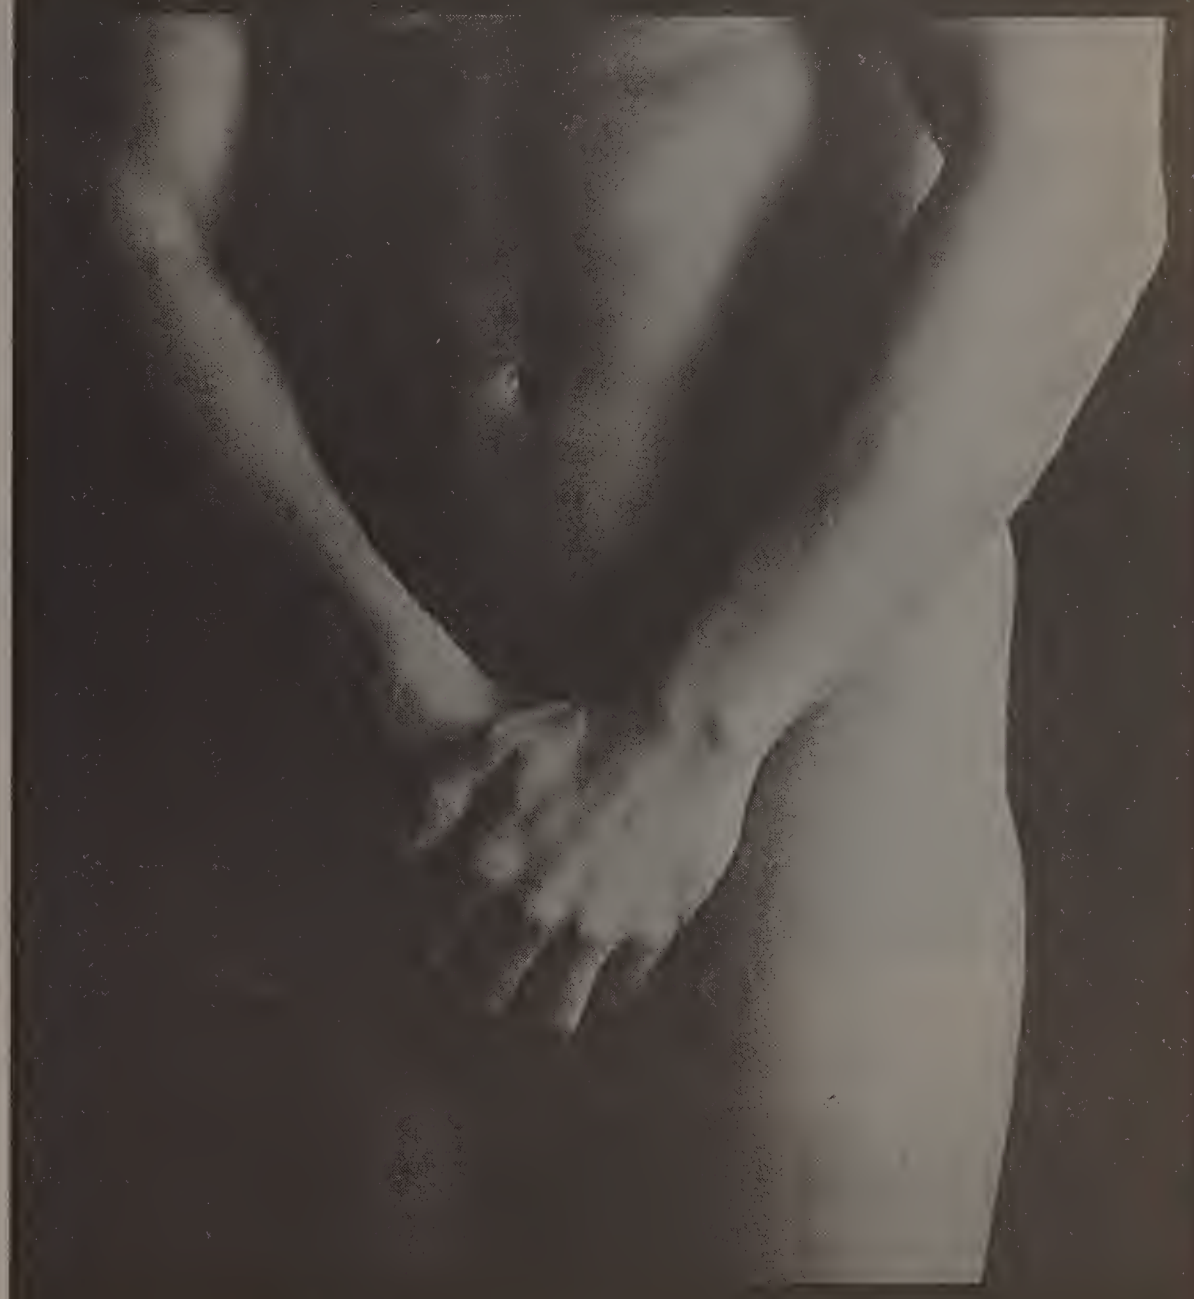
Incidences reported without regard to causality with Aldara.*

Adverse events judged to be possibly or probably related to Aldara and reported by more than 1% of patients include: Application Site Disorders: Wart Site Reactions (burning, hypopigmentation, irritation, itching, pain, rash, sensitivity, soreness, stinging, tenderness); Remote Site Reactions (bleeding, burning, itching, pain, tenderness, tinea cruris); Body as a Whole: fatigue, fever, influenza-like symptoms; Central and Peripheral Nervous System Disorders: headache; Gastro-Intestinal System Disorders: diarrhea; Musculo-Skeletal System Disorders: myalgia.

OVERDOSAGE

Overdosage of Aldara 5% cream is unlikely due to minimal percutaneous absorption. However, persistent topical overdosing of Aldara 5% cream could result in severe local skin reactions. Hypotension was reported following multiple oral doses of >200 mg of imiquimod and was resolved following oral or intravenous fluid administration.

DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION



Aldara cream is to be applied 3 times per week, prior to normal sleeping hours, and left on the skin for 6-10 hours.

Hiding from genital warts won't make them go away.

You can put an end to the warts— and the worry—with ALDARA cream.

ALDARA is a prescription cream both men and women can use at home to treat external genital warts. Just see your doctor for a diagnosis and a prescription, and ALDARA cream can get rid of the warts—so you can stop worrying.

Most common side effects are redness, peeling, and itching where ALDARA cream is applied, which may be caused by the body's immune response to the drug.

ALDARA cream treats external genital warts but is not a cure. The effect of ALDARA cream on the spread of genital warts to partners is unknown. ALDARA cream may weaken condoms and diaphragms when applied before sexual contact.

★★★★ Terrific

The Big Hit
★★★1/2

Psycho psycho psycho fun; the chutzpah of this action comedy crosses that fine line between obnoxious and inspired. Mark Wahlberg is deadpan hilarious as the hapless hitman caught in a maelstrom. A nice guy who feels guilty about everything except killing people, he is squeezed for cash by fiancee Christina Applegate and girlfriend Lela Rochon. So he throws in with Lou Diamond Phillips's dodgy scheme to kidnap the daughter of a Japanese tycoon. Things go terribly wrong. This John Woo-produced movie has texture galore, brassy editing and candy-bright cinematography. Kirk Wong makes his Hollywood directing debut (the irony is that in Hong Kong, Wong was one of the more sober pulpmeisters, and here he leaps proudly over the top). Phillips, as a testosterone-overdose case, is a few steps too cartoonish. China Chow is a hoot as the pain-in-the-butt kidnapee.

In The Big Hit Mark Wahlberg and company have fun.

Chinese Box

Wayne Wang calls this movie a love-hate letter to his native Hong Kong. It's a stimulating collage of sights and sounds from the city's last months a a British colony in 1997. At its core is an achingly moving story about a dying Western journalist with an insatiable desire to find out what makes Hong Kong tick, and an unrequited passion for a beautiful Chinese woman with a dishonorable past. Jeremy Irons gives a daredevil performance as the yearning writer; he arrives at an emotional rawness that feels lived in, not acted out. Gong Li gives three-dimensional womanliness to the object of Irons's desire. Maggie Cheung is great as the brash and resourceful street girl whom Irons sees as emblematic of Hong Kong's East-West hybrid. Ruben Blades boosts the spirits with comic relief.

He Got Game
★★★1/2

Spike Lee charges back into the big leagues with his most emotionally true film yet. The pivotal relationship between a father (Denzel Washington) and son (Ray Allen) isn't drowned out by the broader-picture look at basketball recruitment. Both lead performances are outstanding. The hook is compelling: Washington is a prisoner who is promised an early parole if he can convince his estranged son, a high-school hoops phenomenon, to choose the state university. He returns to the Coney Island projects and tries to redeem himself in the eyes of his son and daughter. The son is pressured from all sides about his college choice, and temptations are dangled in front of him. There's a weak subplot involving Washington and prostitute Milla Jovovich (doing a decent Marisa Tomei impression). But the movie makes potent returns to the court, where man and boy thrash out their emotions with the help of a ball and a hoop.

Taste of Cherry

Iran's Abbas Kiarostami, who has made some of the last decade's most rewarding films, constructs an engrossing, oddly skewed parable. We follow a cryptic, cadaverous middle-aged man as he drives around the outskirts of Tehran. He is looking for a man to shovel dirt into his grave the next morning; he plans to take an overdose of pills that night. The strange plan of suicide is the premise for a series of piquant dialogues that take place on the road. Kiarostami uses the bleak landscape around construction sites to reflect the world-weariness felt by the protagonist. His use of nonprofessional actors adds a feel of authenticity. The film's ending melds the real and the surreal.

He Got Game marks the return of Spike Lee.

Two Girls and a Guy

James Toback's chamber piece is full of sour notes. Two women in their 20s (Heather Graham and Natasha Gregson Wagner) find out they've been the simultaneous girlfriends of an actor (Robert Downey Jr.). The showdown unfolds in his Manhattan loft. Downey's riff-y delivery of his self-justifications is so annoying that two questions persist: why don't these women walk away, and why did either get involved with this jackass in the first place? Toback's prowling camera calls attention to itself. The memorable scene is one in which Graham and Downey sneak away to the bedroom and bring each other to climax without intercourse (this hardly explicit scene raised the ire of the MPAA ratings board, a sad sign of the times).

Wild Man Blues

This curious documentary about Woody Allen's side gig as a Dixieland clarinetist is wonderful as an homage to roots jazz—and bloody fascinating as a peek into the private lives of Woody and Soon-Yi. Documentarian Barbara Kopple (known for her films celebrating the labor movement) accompanied the couple and the band with which Woody plays weekly in New York on a freaky European concert-hall tour. See a shaken Woody, far from his home turf, mobbed by adoring Italian fans. Listen in as twentysomething Soon-Yi functions as the maladjusted comic genius's caretaker. Hear some dynamite Allen quips. And see the famously anal Woody gloriously lose himself in the music onstage, among his fellow players. Hear some of the most pleasurable music that America has ever produced. Playing at the Brattle Theatre May 15-21 only.

Tastings

BY KRYSTIAN VON SPEIDEL

Feelin' Wine

The Top of the Hub Restaurant, in association with Ferrari-Carano, will present a wine tasting complemented by a specially prepared four course dinner created by the Hub's Chef Dean Moore on Tuesday, May 12 from 7-10 p.m. Tickets for the event are $75 per person and may be reserved by calling 536-1775.

Beerrific

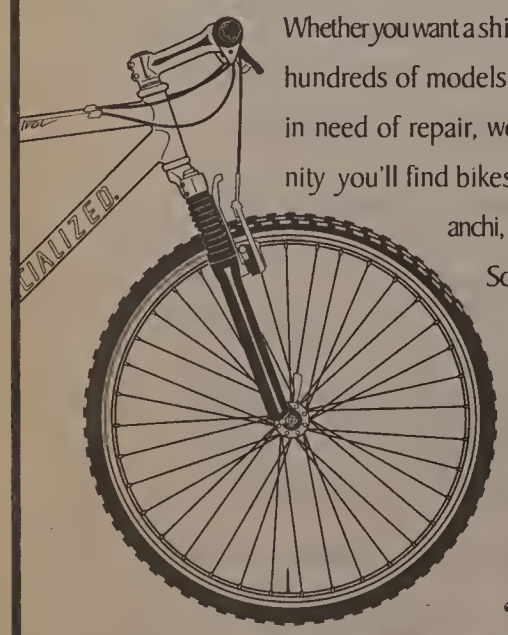
Snack on munchies and throw some back at Boston Beer Works' continuing series of award-winning beer tastings. Tickets for the May 13, 7-9 p.m. event are $20; reservations are recommended. For more information, call 536-BEER.

A Taste of Spring

The South End's Sheffield Wine & Spirits and the Boston Center for the Arts have teamed-up for what promises to be one of the season's most interesting events. On Sunday, May 17 from 5-9 p.m., the BCA will host a wine and cheese tasting to benefit the fight against pediatric AIDS. What makes the event so unusual is that the tasting will include a performance by Centastage of "Pictures at an Exhibition," as well as a pre-performance discussion with Centastage actors and artistic director Joe Antoun. Tickets are $35 for the tasting and performance; $15 for the tasting only.

Tres Brulée

What better way to end a fabulous French dinner than with a to-die-for Grand Marnier creme brulée garnished with berries and caramel lattice. And who better to teach you how to prepare such a wonder than 75 Chestnut executive chef, Jean-Pierre DeBeuf. The demonstration will be followed by a tasting and includes an appropriate wine. The May 19 event will begin at 6:15 and pre-paid reservations are required. Held at the French Library & Cultural Center (266-4351), admission for the event is $35 for library members, students and seniors; $40 for non-members.



Elegantly Wasted

For those in the Back Bay neighborhood looking for a quick alternative to typical lunchtime fare, the Palm Restaurant has announced a prix fixe lunch menu through May 22. For $13.95, diners may choose among a specially selected, though no less fantastic, menu which will ensure that they are in and out within 45 minutes. Held Monday-Friday from 11:30-3, reservations are recommended and may be gleaned by calling 867-9292.

Chill Out

Spring has sprung and the last thing anyone wants on a hot day is...a hot meal. Enter Marjorie Druker – chef and owner of the New England Soup Factory. Located in both Brookline and Newton, the restaurant offers diners a choice of chilled soups, including such exotic treats as avocado, cucumber and lime, as well as the old standby, gaspacho. The soups are available by the bowl, pint or quart, making preparing a spring dinner a snap. For those who crave the more traditional, Druker still prepares her famous triple strength chicken vegetable and other soups hot.

Bostonians
Wake up native Bostonians. When somebody strikes up a conversation they don't always want something. When somebody says good morning in the street don't just ignore them. And when you say you'll call actually do it. You never know, if you just a little less rude and surly you might actually meet some interesting different people. At the very least you'd make this town more welcoming for those of us not born and bred here.

Mystery Man
You came by my apartment in March, looking for someone named "Smith" who lived in a certain unit. You didn't get too much help from the doorman, since he was trying to protect my privacy. But he notified me anyway. After the first visit, panic set in, and then curiosity. This curiosity led me to give permission for the doorman to offer you more information if you ever came back. But you haven't yet, and the curiosity is making me crazy. Anyway, my name isn't Smith, but if you want more information about that unit, just ask the doorman and he can tell you how to contact me directly. I Hope it's not too late to hear from the mystery man! I hope my intuitions are right and I know who you are, but the Smith part confuses me?

TO THE WOMAN ON THE N. SHORE WHD LOVES CARDINAL ZIN
You came into the store on Tuesday, March 31 looking for "Shiraz?" I walked you over to the Australian section where you asked me if the Shiraz tastes anything like the Bonny Doon Cardinal Zin. I told you, "It's my favorite and Yes, it's very similar." After you selected your Shiraz, we talked about our distaste for chilled reds. How could people do that? I wished I'd carded you to see where you're from, but the other guy did. Were you really "checking me out"? Stop by the store to see me so we can discuss getting together for a bottle of that Cardinal Zin.
FEELING WINE

For LuLu:
I waited for 6 years to get the opportunity to look into those beautiful green eyes again. I was thrilled that I had finally found you again, and that our feelings of attraction were finally mutual. This was a fairytale come true! (Until NYC.)

I have never been so horrified and attracted to someone as much as you in my entire life. I was leery of this trip from the very beginning and was totally serious when I said that my falling down the stairs prior to our departure was a harbinger of gloom and doom, I warned you about the pitfalls of traveling without a lot of fun money but you wouldn't listen. I wanted to slap you senseless when you cavetched about the bill and made a complete jackass of yourself in the lobby of the Hilton. You knew that it was not going to be cheap. You offered to put it on your card and I objected, I didn't twist your bloody arm. It was not my fault that you did not have the funds to cover it. (And you knew that I didn't even before we departed and you said that was fine for you at the time)

Miss thing, you are a raving lunachick. You make Hitler look like Ghandi. I have never seen anyone more mentally unstable than the likes of you in my entire life!!!

Even still, for some odd reason, I was willing to put this all aside and say that people just deal with stress differently, that you had a few bad days...I was so psyched to move down and get to know you a little better, for us to finally be lovers, but was horrified when you relayed to me that you began seeing your ex again even though you said you loved me not one day before...

You are a self-centered egomaniac. Just because you are a stripper doesn't make you a goddess or even "The Bomb" as you so flippantly put it...What is important is how someone looks on the inside...And to be quite honest with you, the fantasy was much nicer! Have a nice life with your ex.
RETARDSGIRL

Marathon Girl
You had just finished the Boston Marathon and were trying to get to the opposite side of Boylston Street. So was I. You had blonde hair with a hat on and I could not believe you looked that beautiful after running 26 miles. We bumped into each other again down the street but didn't speak this time. You told me you lived in the North End and worked in advertising sales for The Improper Bostonian (how ironic). I told you I did the same thing for a large radio station in Boston. I didn't get your name or give you mine, but I wanted to. If you had the same thought call me and leave a message (if you want to)
SHOULDHAVESPOKEUP

Jenn at 80-100 Boylston:
You have blond hair, glasses and like grilled cheeses. You saw me every day always looking the same. You said my sauce sucked, and I asked you if you wanted "to kick my dog on the way out". You threw me the cutest embarrassed look I've ever seen. So, we'd be the perfect match...I can embarrass you and you can just be there. I swear to you, my breakfast is better than my dinner. SOME FACTS ABOUT ACNE
- Chocolate does not cause acne.
- Suntanning does not clear up acne.
- Stress is an aggravator of acne.
- Cosmetics, even some synthetic oil-based and hypo-allergenic brands, will aggravate acne.

No one does what we do for ACNE
The fact is...we do it better than anyone else.

Rockie HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

MAY 6 - MAY 19, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

You could be back to "ground zero," the place you were at when Mercury turned retrograde in your sign six weeks ago, discussing the same points with the same people. Now that Mercury has cleared its "shadow," progress is possible. This is an excellent week for leaps and bounds, for moving ahead with all due speed while your Mars ruler is being favored by expansive Jupiter and the productive Taurus sun. Plan your moves, stay within your parameters and don't let distractions throw you off course. You can be serious without being negative.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

First comes passion, then comes commitment. While your loving Venus ruler is favored by powerful Pluto in your house of partners, all things (the more mysterious, the better) are possible. Add a full moon at 20 Taurus-Scorpio, the exalted spiritual vibes of the Buddha festival, and you have a weekend made for the gods and the Bulls. However, if you take your physical gifts, your strength and stamina for granted—while the Taurus sun and Mars meet on Tuesday, you'll be in remarkable shape—you may push too hard and break something other than a record.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Past perfect. Look for an opportunity to correct whatever paperwork was on your plate when Mercury turned retrograde six weeks ago. Your ruler is back where it came from, giving you an amended perspective and, by next Wednesday, a workable way to proceed. Should a secret admirer make a move in your direction, don't waste precious time questioning motives. Fire, i.e., passion, high spirits and honesty, fuels our feelings this weekend. And don't take an older friend's advice as gospel, the voice of experience is just another opinion.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Sex sells. Whether you're producing an erotic entertainment project or teaching the kids, keep the procreative element—the lions or fruit flies going at it—on the front burner. The same goes for your personal life. All varieties of relationships take on a deeper meaning this weekend while the sexy, secretive Scorpio moon builds to a climax on Monday. Tuesday can be overwhelming as peers or buddies become invigorated, even ballsy, just as a parent or boss decides to adhere to the letter of the law. Avoid getting caught in the middle.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

A hot time for fire signs as Venus in Aries and Pluto in Sagittarius reach out to Lions who love to love. The full moon this weekend highlights your deepest feelings about the family or your concern about where you're living, something not readily apparent. If you need to renovate, start now, since other people's resources are readily available. Tuesday, as your sun ruler becomes infused with Martian energy, is the time to launch a campaign, declare your independence and ignore any discouraging words.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Read Aries and Gemini. Then decide if full disclosure about a lingering money matter is the best way to go. The secretive Scorpio full moon might cast a suspicious light on all communications, but positive, take-charge Taurean energy can spread your reputation far wider than it is now. If an enthusiastic partner is offering help, accept with grace and whatever humility you can muster. Tuesday could be a downer because your Mercury ruler, conjuncting prudent Saturn, demands a strict accounting instead of pie-in-the- sky projections.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

All you need is love, and whatever meaningful material manifestation he/she offers. If Pluto wasn't in your money house, you'd probably be content with a card. But because your Venus ruler is in a harmonious trine to the planet of transformation, you need and you'll get something that's meant to heal the hurts you've suffered. This Mother's Day should be taped and documented before it turns into a family legend. If you're considering a bold financial move, do it Tuesday when you have the courage to meet your partner's resistance.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Evidence that "this week will be better" should come over the weekend as adoring Venus embraces your Pluto co-ruler. Not only will the supportive trine get you laid, it'll make you feel warm and fuzzy. If you need to get your sting back, wait until Tuesday when the Taurus sun joins assertive Mars, your other co-ruler. Then you'll see just how sharp, how sexually dominant you can be. Heightening your awareness of your self and your relationship to a partner is the Buddha's full moon festival. Anyone up for a change?

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Family pressure is family pressure, no matter how gentle, how much "it's for your own good". Because your Jupiter ruler sextiles the sun and Mars (the action planets) you may be urged (instead of coerced) to take on more than you normally would. If you're working out, be careful you don't overexert; if you're working, stay focused on one goal at a time. If you're up for surgery, then Tuesday would be my choice; the moon will be in Sag and, even if it's quite soon after the full moon, how badly can one bleed?

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

A casual friend may want to get closer, to uncover more about you and your immediate environment. However, since Saturnian sense and sensibility rules your roost, nobody gets into your pad (or pants) except the old, the tried-and-true. Your landlord or parent might add to your worries while Mercury conjuncts your Saturn ruler, but you can deal with that. Meanwhile, there you are, anticipating action (pleasure-loving Taurus sun and horny Mars in your house of romance and risk), watching the sexy Scorpio moon come up, go down.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Basically you get this week off, a chance to recover from last weekend. No doubt you'll enjoy buying special (probably sexy) gifts for the mother figures in your life, celebrating the complete birth-death-rebirth cycle, and feeling deeply about your home during the Taurus-Scorpio full moon. There's an edginess to this full moon, but if know where you're headed on Monday, you can use this spurt of energy to accomplish heroic deeds for the family and physically-demanding tasks around the house.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

The possibility of actually having the power to transform a parent can affect guppies and killer sharks alike. Because Pluto in your midheaven is being trined by judicious, gentle Venus this weekend, you may succeed through direct acts of affection. How propitious, just in time for Mother's Day! This full moon accentuates your ability to communicate, to reach a wide audience as well as to connect with siblings and neighbors. If you're going to extend yourself, be sure you don't come on too fast, too strong or too rough. Play nice.

RAPUNZEL, RAPUNZEL, WHO DOES YOUR HAIR?

Boston, it seems, has become stylish.

How else to explain the fact that New York mega-stylist John Sahag—whose clients include just about every famous head of hair you've ever heard of—chose the Institute of Contemporary Art to throw the launch party for his new line of hair care products?

Granted, there were no mega-wattage celebrities there, although the rumor persisted that Naomi Campbell was going to arrive at any minute, but it was an undeniably chic, good-looking crowd, which included music mogul Richie Balsbaugh and his stunning fiance, Maureen Griffin, nightlife king Patrick Lyons and his queen, Kristina, the madonna of Armani, Caroline Brown, fashionista John Stefanelli of Alan Bilzerian, the toothsome twosome of Jennifer and Beth Storey, lovely Lisa Newton O'Neill and her ne'er do well husband, Brian, hair deity Mario Russo, an old friend of Sahag's, It-boy Jeremy Dellaria and countless Scary Hair People of Newbury Street.

AVEZ-VOUS DISH?

Dirt? A Spectacular Social Occasion? Call J.S. at 859-1400 ext. 303

Outside, giant video images were projected against the facade of the ICA and neighboring buildings. Inside, women were invited to leave lipstick marks on a piece of paper hung on the wall, while the galleries were decorated with a gigantic glowing orb and enough video equipment to induce acute paranoia. Once all the guests had arrived, the show began, with models wearing hairdos that looked like something out of Dr. Suess, circulating among the guests, who oohed and aahed appreciatively.

Not that everyone was fixated on hair. For instance, one guest turned to another and said, "I love your eye color. Is it real?"

BUSMAN'S HOLIDAY

One would think that after dancing on stage at the Wang Center, the members of Alvin Ailey would want to sit and relax at the post-performance opening night reception at Aria. Not so.

After changing out of their costumes, the company took over the dance floor at the conspicuously hip new nightclub, joining such admirers as Cambridge-dwelling grad students Jonathan and Jennifer Soros (yes, that Soros) and Beau Brashares, whose lovely wife, Kirsten, works for Inc. magazine, the landlord of all Cambridge, Marvin Gilmore, arts patrons Bert and Rosalie Cohen, orthopedic surgeon Dr. Jeff Guy (whose impressive resume includes stints as a professional baseball player and male model before he became an M.D.) and one exhausted-looking person who yawned and said, "My God, I'm getting callouses just from looking at them."

HOPE THEY COUNTED THE SILVER

How often do you get invited to a cocktail party at a rock star's house?

Not very, which is why an interesting and eclectic crowd schlepped out to the little get-together hosted by Aerosmith's Tom Hamilton and his wife, Terry, a board member of the Art Institute of Boston, at their home in Chestnut Hill.

Held to honor photographer Luis Gonzalez Palma, a guest lecturer at the AIB, the party's guestlist included photographer Olivia Parker and her avuncular husband, John, whose family owned Parker Brothers, white-hot painters Paul Nagano and Maxine Blankenshi, whose work adorns the walls of the Hamilton's living room, gallery owner Bernie Toale, restaurateur Debbie Lewis, banker Peter Hamilton Nee and force of nature Linda Comstock, all of whom sipped wine and grazed at a tapas buffet while chatting about this and that.

As sedate as the evening was, however, it provided some sorely needed coolness points for at least one guest, who said, "Now I can tell my kids that I partied with Aerosmith."

DO THEY GIVE OUT OSCARS FOR PRETENDING TO HAVE FUN?

In theory, Salute the Stars seemed like a good idea: a gala dinner, hosted by the Bette Davis Foundation and Friends of the Libraries of Boston University, to honor Academy Award winner Meryl Streep with the Bette Davis Lifetime Achievement Award, and to mark the opening of an exhibition of Davis' personal effects.

Unfortunately, it involved BU—an institution that makes up in arrogance what it lacks in prestige. (On a recent episode of the Rosie O'Donnell Show, she and Marisa Tomei shared a laugh about how they had both been kicked out of the acting program but still receive fundraising letters from the school.)

Not to say that the evening didn't attract a noteworthy and accomplished crowd: In addition to Streep, guests included Hollywood royal Roddy McDowell, Davis' son and daughter-in-law, Michael and Chou-Chou Merrill, who live in Brookline, the A.R.T.'s Jeremy and Jan Geidt, honorary consul of Monaco Dr. Helene Day, monocle-wearing man-about-town Martin Slobodkin, the distinguished head of special collections, Howard Gotlieb, and David and Kim Friedberg, to name a few.

However, the press conference that started the evening had all the solemnity of the Middle East Peace Talks, followed by a cocktail reception that had all the charm of the Middle East Peace Talks, followed by a dinner that featured as much longwinded bloviating as the Middle East Peace Talks, all of which led up to the presentation of the award—a piece of crystal that Streep could have bought at Bloomingdale's and thereby spared herself a long and boring evening.

She deserves better. And so does Bette Davis. ✦

The Joke Is on You

I was dumbfounded by the blatant double standard expressed in the "Loosely Speaking" section about Marjorie Clapprood (April 22, 1998). Anyone who has attended a St. Patrick's Day or candidate roast will hear some of the most raunchy, sexist, homophobic and even racist jokes told by male politicians. For some reason those jokes do not end up in the paper. I find it ironic that Marjorie Clapprood's statements are the ones deemed worthy of making it to print. Male politicians are called "witty," even when their jokes far exceed the boundaries of good taste. The jokes I've heard recently put anything Marjorie Clapprood had to say to shame. The quotes in your April 22 edition were taken from a benefit comedy show where Marjorie not only blasted her male peers, but also brought down the house. Enough is enough. You would think that in the 1990s we would be past this kind of sexist double standard for elected officials.

Long ago Marjorie Clapprood proved that she could go toe to toe with the big boys at the State House. If this threatens them...then good. Many of us are hoping that she will bring the same abilities to the U.S. Congress. One of Clapprood's greatest gifts is her ability to use humor as a weapon and, God knows, in this Republican Congress she's going to need it. She has my vote.

How about The Improper Bostonian giving a little equal space to some of the jokes told by male politicians at recent roasts around town? I guarantee you they would shock the public compared with the tame and more humorous jokes told by Marjorie Clapprood.

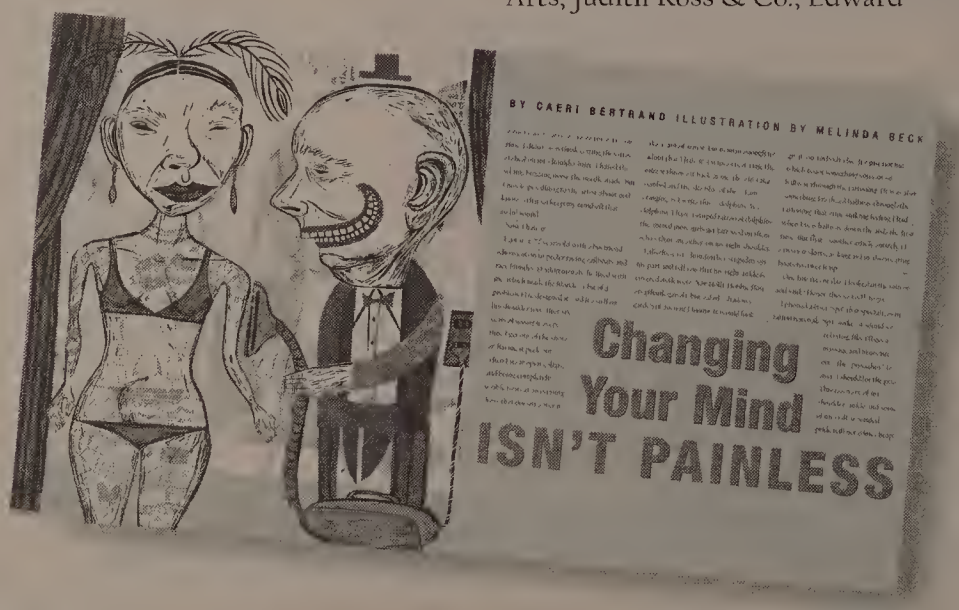
Bottoms Up



Just a quick note to let THE IMPROPER and Caeri Bertrand know that her article on tattoo removal (May 6, 1998) is very much appreciated. I too have a tattoo (hey, that rhymes!) and have had to endure the hardship of looking in the mirror every damn day only to see a nasty mix of colors marked permanently on my ass—it's like a billboard sent by Satan himself. I have been thinking about getting the icky thing removed for about a year, but until I read her story I had never considered it as strongly as I do now. Thank you.

Kathie Lee: Lay Off Already

Tom Weisend's column "Daily Dregs" ("Ad Hoe," May 6, 1998) made me wet my pants. It acknowledged not only the banal stupidity of Middle America's obsession with a woman as plastic as her nails, but also Madison Avenue's assumption that anyone who watches Regis & Kathie Lee must be broke, constipated and dying to refinance their mortgage. It's just not true. I hate to admit it, the show does in fact feature interesting celebrity interviews and home decorating tips. Once you get past candy-coated Kathie you begin to realize her show's appeal. Regis does a fantastic job as the straight man to Kathie's insipid whining. Much as I love to hate Kathie Lee, her show's content makes up for her personality.

However, if only you had contacted us we would have provided you with a more complete list. We celebrated these and other members' longevity in the Back Bay during an association event in 1995.

Decore International, Alianza, DuBarry French Restaurant, Kitchen Arts, Judith Ross & Co., Edward Swartz Realty Inc., Simon's Copley Square, William Hodgins, Inc. and Firestone & Parsons.

I am sure you did not mean to omit these fine establishments from the article. We look forward to reading the next installment of the series!

The Collector

In Westford, about 40 miles from Boston, you can walk among hundreds of butterflies in an enclosed atrium at The Butterfly Place. Call 978 392-0955 for directions.

You'd have to be the princess of flowers to consort with anything like this many butterflies.

Take that hunger for wildness that inspires a trip to the zoo, and take it down to the rarefied, delicate point where your quarry is small and ticklishly flickering: the butterfly. This pleasing, cozily warm atrium called The Butterfly Place, all filled with plants and flowers, is the home of up to 500 butterflies representing about 50 species both indigenous and sexily foreign, though they all look exotic. Their brightly colored lifetimes only last about two weeks, and in that time they sail around in this large glassy area, from flower to flower, doing their delicate flappings and pushup-like gestures, in every luscious color and combination. You'd have to be the princess of flowers to consort with anything like this many butterflies. George, the owner, answers detailed questions, and talks silkworm shop. In the adjacent building there's a video on the eggs-to-larva-to-chrysalis-to-butterfly lifecycle of this magic morpher. Almost as exciting as walking among the butterflies is watching them emerge from the pupa.

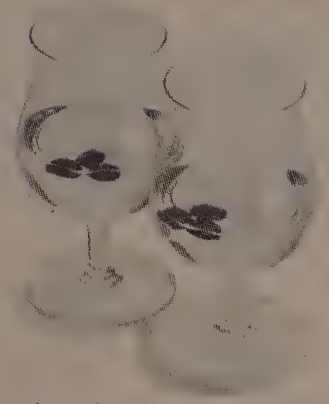
It looks like the chewing gum of the gods.

Splish Splash

Samantha Marder of Innerscape Fountains in Brookline will design a little domesticated fountain for you. Call 734-2026

There's something very pleasing about coming into a room plashing with the liquid music of what turns out to be a small tabletop fountain. Samantha Marder puts together these sparkly concoctions, containers brimming with a variety of semiprecious stones, that conceal in their midst a teeny, soothing bubbler of water. They're all artistically piled and arranged. Red-pepperish carnelian, turquoise, chunky stalactites of crystal, tortuous sculptured native copper—it looks like the chewing gum of the gods—big glassy marbles, slices of amethyst. Sometimes a few shells. Yum Yum. A fruit salad of color that never wilts. Each gemstone has its meaning and symbolism, and satisfies the Feng Shui concept of moving water. The container may be a copper pot, an iridescent scalloped black bowl, a silver dish, even something you provide. Some contain (or could, on That Night, since they can be party like) little tea light candles. In another realm, therapists who ordinarily resort to the plastic Muzak of white-noise machines might consider this far more aesthetic alternative. Prices range from $100 to about $400.

It's good to applaud ethnic differences, but not to stereotype.



Talk About It

Visions runs workshops on racism and the other bothersome isms. 876-9257.

Visions, a company that holds training sessions on ethnic diversity, recognizes that often the problem is not the old blatant, systematic racism but rather what they refer to as "modern racism." That can include well-meaning colorblindness that actually causes people to overlook important differences that exist between various races and groups, and for which one needs "glasses" to see these things, not "blindness." The desired understanding entails more keenly appreciating the beliefs, values, customs etc. of other groups, but also involves becoming sensitive to the many large and subtle ways that even intelligent people live out, to their own amazement, prejudicial attitudes. Avoidance, denial of differences, and a failure to go beyond the personal to the political are said to be common problems. Even more bedeviling is what Visions calls "dysfunctional rescue" in which the dominant group misguidedly, guiltily, demeans members of another group in the name of helping. A Visions workshop puts white people in one room and people of color in another for separate conversations, then brings everyone back together. It's exciting, disturbing, hopeful and at times as painful as the problem the workshop is there to discuss. The leadership is intense and focused.

Loosely Speaking

I'LL HAVE WHAT SHE'S HAVING

The menu at Mistral must include an aphrodisiac. How else to cxplain the loud lesbian tryst that took place in a stall of the ladies room recently? It seems that two female patrons snuck off to the lav for a littlc private dessert and wound up making so much noise that several patrons commented on their activities to the management. Before anything could be done, however, thc pair presumably finished, because they returned, looking satisfied and with all eyes on them, to their table, rejoining their male dates. (What does that tell you?) As for the possibility that they were just washing each other's hair with Clairol Herbal Essence Shampoo, one witness admitted to sneaking a peek through the crack in the door. "I saw that once in Jamaica," said the otherwise demure, middle-aged woman. "I just had to look."

NOW WE KNOW HOW JENNIFER ANISTON FELT

Poor Kasey Kaufman. After years of reporting the news to an apathetic audience, the Channel 4 anchor cut her hair about six weeks ago and was suddenly inundated with a flood of phone calls. "It's bizarre," she says. "I've never gotten so many calls about anything in my life. Every night, after I'm on the air, there are a few calls holding." For what it's worth, the flattering new 'do is the handiwork of Bill Zecco at the Salon at 10 Newbury St.

TO CATCH A CHEF

By all accounts, the Art Institutc of Boston's annual Edible Art Gala at Shreve, Crump & Low was a success, although it proved to bc a bit of an embarrassment for the Hotel Meridien. According to police, executive chef Eric Castille—one of many chefs who had created a work of art out of food for the event—was caught with his hand in a rather expensive cookie jar. Thc storc's surveillance tapes filmed Castille reaching into a display case and removing a pearl necklace and bracelet valued at $4,560. When the stolcn jewelry was later recovered from the glove compartment of the van he was driving, Castille—who reportedly earns a salary in the $70,000 range—could think of nothing better to say but the hackneyed, "How'd that get there?" The hotel summarily dismissed him.

Police Sergeant Margot Hill, for her part, resorted to a highbrow pun in discussing the case, saying, "In his quest for pearls, wisdom eluded him."

AW, JUST CALL HIM MAYOR

The April (30) Globe showered Bank Boston's Ira Jackson with power, referring to him in a story as the bank's president. Alas, by May (1), he was deflowered. Back, as a Correction noted, to an executive vice president.

DADDY'S KISS

He and fellow junior Kal Malbergh produced Vivian's Kiss with $8500 (that didn't come from dad, said young Quinn's PR person) and a gaggle of Back Bay extras. The film, which Quinn hopes to release in Septembcr, was shot in the North End, Club Joy and the Swiss O'Tell (hard by William?), the press release relates. A featured actor in the movie, Vincent Kalousdian, from Scituate, is "what some might call the next Sean Penn," said Quinn, modestly. His male lead, Anthony Ingrassia, said Quinn, is nothing less than "the funniest newcomer since Chris Farley." That would bc the late Chris Farley?

Those blessed bureaucrats at the Boston Redevelopment Authority have been pinching pennies again. Well actually more like quarters—theirs. Although the changeover began in April 1997, the BRA's phones remained dime-friendly a year later.

Until we told on them.

Hotter Than a June Bride

From Cambridge funnyman Dan Zevin (whose last tome was Entry-Level Life: A Complete Guide to Masquerading as a Member of the Real World) comes The Nearly-Wed Book, just in time, no doubt, to save some querulous souls from a trip down the aisle, or, all things being equilibratory, help them on their way. Chapters include "Going Public" (as in when you should tell friends, family and "others"), "Making the Cut" (who to invite and who to blacklist) and, finally, "From Nearly-wed to Newlywed," which adds the necessary subsection "The Conjugal Countdown." And alas, if anyone is wondering, Zevin gained all this valuable information by actually getting married—but not all in the name of research.

The Right Stuff No More

Say it ain't so. We thought it could never happen—not in a million years—but it's true. It's alive! After 10 years in remission, New Kids on the Block—the late-'80s icky pop group in the same spirit as Vanilla Ice—are suddenly back in the spotlight with dedicated fans of the group holding a NKOTB "block party" at various local clubs around the area from May 28 to 31. Boston's Kiss 108 will also hold its annual Kiss Concert on May 30 in conjunction with the NKOTB "party." Scheduled to perform are the late-'90s version of NKOTB, The Backstreet Boys. SHAKE YOUR GROOVE THANG

Whit Stillman wants the world to know that when it comes to disco, the clichéd ideal of The Last Party, Anthony Haden-Guest's guide to the heady days of Studio 54, in no way resembles his latest movie, The Last Days of Disco, set for release May 29. The Harvard-educated writer-director of Metropolitan and Barcelona sees Last Days clearing away the myth surrounding disco created by Saturday Night Fever. Of his own disco days, Stillman says, "The cliché is better than I remember it—disco wasn't that exciting visually." He also entreats us to remember that "this great totem of Manhattan sophistication was first tried out in Queens" and, he's quick to point out, Ian Schrager and Steven Rubell, founders of Studio 54, started off in Boston before moving to New York. Although his Vogue review of Haden-Guest's book was positive, Stillman feels such memoirs distance the disco experience from "civilians." According to him, "You can get to the truth on film through fiction—reality is a real albatross in feature films. When all that effort goes into recreating unimportant details you lose the heart of the movie." Ergo, the discotheque in Last Days goes unnamed and indeed is far more attractive than the originals.

For Stillman, who grew up in New York, disco was a time to shun the "dance wasteland" days of the early '70s. His memories don't include polyester but rather the natural-fiber clothes that were de rigueur at the better nightspots. ("My family patrimony came down to one good navy-blue English suit that got me in.") The movie, which follows a group of Hampshire College and Harvard grads as they traverse the early days of yuppie-hood, is set against the backdrop of an early-'80s everyone-who's-anyone-goes disco. "It's not that often that things happen so serendipitously and casually," says Whitman of his Last Days, an uncomplicated celebration of an era frequently and unjustly maligned —Krystian von Speidel

Dying To Dye

Ever since you were a wee little tykester you craved hair like your blue-and-pink-streaked Barbie dolls and My Pretty Ponies. And for good reason. Those multi-colored locks are a downright amusing and harmless way to have as much fun as your Rainbow Bright toys did when you weren't looking.

Here are some more and less rad ways to light up your locks for an evening—or a lifetime:

The rainbow coalition of hair keeps getting brighter.

❊ Want your prom to be remembered as the night your hair was pink? Hair mascaras and tinted hair sprays give you an evening of Lisa Frank glamour that will wash out before your corsage has faded. Unfortunately, many of these one-night wonders look clumpy and stiff. Avoid build-up by applying one coat at a time. Let each dry, then comb through. Repeat the process until you achieve the desired intensity.

❊ If a fake reality is what you are after, nothing beats Tish and Snooky's Manic Panic's Glam Strips. These brightly-dyed chunks of real hair fasten securely to your noggin with built-in clips. Find these must-have hairs for only nine bucks at Allston Beat, 348 Newbury St., Eros Boutique 581A Tremont St. or call Manic Panic at 1 (800) 95-MANIC.

❊ Any punkster worth her weight in safety pins will tell you no hair dye works better than Manic Panic. After a year spent experimenting with funky hair dyes, the choice was clear for my hair-hoppin' testers: Manic Panic coloring gels and creams last longer, don't dry the hair out and won't leave purple on your pillow cases like other Johnny-come-lately color companies. Find these lock-shockers at Newbury Comics and at Allston Beat.

❊ So you've decided to go for a permanent rave—color that's as dyed-in-the-wool as you are. Whether you are going for a peek-a-boo pink streak that can only be seen when you pull your hair up, or bold blue bangs that tell the world you're a star, unless you are a towhead, you'll have to bleach your hair to the palest blond for colors to show intensely. Please, oh please—have this done professionally to ensure flawless color and maximum hair health.

❊ Moe and Alan of Jerel Roberts Salon are respected veterans of vivid locks. These two tattooed sweetie pies work patiently and safely with li'l kids, and crank out elegant yet show-stopping streaks for older folks who dare to show flare. Jerel Roberts Salon is at 138 Newbury St. Call (617) 536-4443 for an appointment

HENNA AND HER SISTERS

Spending life eternal with the same tattoo might be a bit too permanent for you. But your lust for body ornamentation is a part of your glamourous spirit that you don't want to squelch.

Have I got the perfect answer for you: Mehndi, the ancient art of henna dying. Pulverized henna plants are mixed with zesty oils, then meticulously painted on the skin in beautiful, living art that should last two weeks to a month.

If you think this kind of out-there beauty is something you need to go to New York for, think again. Allston's own Rites of Passage, at 107 Brighton Ave., is a licensed piercing parlor that also houses the gifted and personable Maria, Boston's only Mehndi specialist.

She can decorate your hands for a Mira Sorvino or Madonna look. Or this artiste of the arm can whip you up a Mehndi ankle bracelet, necklace or rings, or an imitation tattoo. With her artist heart and your Barney-like imagination, the possibilities are endless. Prices start at $20. Call (617) 783-1918 for an appointment.

If Mehndi still seems too extreme—or you refuse to set foot in Allston now that you've finally moved out—take a look at what the mainstream cosmetic companies like Lancôme and Estée Lauder have come up with. Lancôme's Body Visuals temporary tattoos last, and they look like honest hennaing. Lauder tempts with delicate stencils you paint on with waterproof eyeliners. Cool, huh?

With choices like these, it's gonna be a long, hot—and colorful— summer vacation.

EXTREME BEAUTY

Beauty and fashion are ways to express who you are—both in and out of a crowd. Maybe you push the envelope by painting your eyebrows purple. Maybe your Gap khakis help you look normal. Perhaps you flaunt your musical taste with a Portishead t-shirt, or celebrate your religious traditions with Hasidic curls. Well, this is how you and your subculture have chosen to decorate your outer shells, and I say: Work it, Garnish Girl!

Some—let's call them "parents"—are confused by or even judgmental of today's kids who dye their hair chartreuse, tattoo their necks and pierce their elbows. I urge these harrumphing home-bodies to welcome today's additions to the melting pot of self-expression. Weren't YOU a kooky kid once? Don't YOU remember begging your mom for bell bottoms that dragged to the ground, or defiantly wearing your hair like a Rod Stewart rooster—even though your classmates called you names?

Nineties kids have taken grooming to a fabulous extreme. Expressing their need for a sparkling future, they put on glitter makeup and metallic clothing. With henna-ed hands and bejeweled belly buttons, they honor centuries past. And the traffic-stopping neon colors they flaunt brighten up a beige world. They are setting fashion up for its next millenium— and it's gonna be great.

Their extreme veneer reflects the upbringing of a generation whose parents taught them to celebrate cultural and individual differences. Let's not undo their accepting nature. Instead, let's sit back and see what those wonderfully wacky adolescents are up to. Who knows? They might offer YOU a few tips to spice up your life.

Fashion Freedom—Honor it on Memorial Day.

Johnny Depp is flat as Raoul Duke.

MOVIES

Head Hunter

By Betsy Sherman

Fear and Loathing feels declawed, with a miscast Depp but hot Benicio Del Toro

EVEN THOUGH I WAS JUST A TEENAGER at the end of the hippie days, I remember big, bloated dumb-smart guys like the one Benicio Del Toro plays in Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas. The late '60s/early '70s was their golden age. These walrus-men could rage like a tornado, then all of a sudden be the eye of the tornado, calm and (seemingly) rational eye. The counterculture scene was perfect for their combination of unbound appetite and unbridled paranoia. This was a place where they were actually listened to (and they got to wear dashikis). Today's walrus-men stay behind closed doors, creating Web pages that offer Klingon glossaries.

Del Toro's performance as Dr. Gonzo in the movie of Hunter S. Thompson's 1971 story/essay is astoundingly immediate and winning (especially considering how the actor's babbling turn in The Usual Suspects was an ugly spectacle). His warm-blooded presence as co-star of this trippy buddy movie turns out to be crucial, considering star Johnny Depp's just as astoundingly flat lead performance as Thompson alter-ego Raoul Duke.

This being a Terry Gilliam-directed movie, there's more to talk about than just narrative and performance. The movie is a science fair of mutating setpieces through which pass Duke and Gonzo, under the influence of an array of drugs from mescaline to LSD to ether. American born-expatriate Gilliam fills the screen with American grotesques, in that capital of American grotesqueness (before it was sanitized), Las Vegas. Baroque set, costume and makeup design, and copious computer graphics, make the hallucinations—and the high-strung 1971 reality—come alive. Duke/Depp, in a voice constricted by his ever-present cigarette holder, gives aural commentary ("devil ether" makes you "behave like the village drunkard in an Irish novel" "unable to communicate with your spinal cord" "the perfect drug for Las Vegas").

The story's two refugees from the status-seeking ends of their professions—Duke is a reporter and Gonzo a lawyer—barrel from Los Angeles to Vegas in a red convertible. They take full advantage of the press perks as Duke covers the Mint 400 motorcycle race. There are side-trips out of Vegas, but most of the film finds the fellas either turning their hotel rooms into primal ooze or infiltrating the city's arenas of leisure (the Silent Majority finds solace in soothing icons like Debbie Reynolds and Perry Como, as the music of Janis and Jimi blares). Big yuks come from Duke's assignment to cover the national district attorneys' powwow against drug abuse.

There are hitches in this supersaturated revel. The major bummer is how wrong Johnny Depp is in the role of Duke. A cartoonish performance isn't out of place in a nightmare-romp, but Depp gives us tics of behavior and nothing more (he could be bucking for the Ministry of Silly Walks). I never suspended my awareness that it's Depp's babyface underneath the hat (hiding a chrome dome) and sunglasses. We don't feel sensation along with Duke; Depp suggests a kibbitzer at a smorgasbord. Luckily, morphing effects put us inside the drug experiences, even if Depp can't: animated bats fly out of his eyes, a desk clerk's face gets melty, and metaphorical lounge lizards turn into giant lizards.

With merely a disguised movie star at the center of the film, Fear and Loathing feels declawed. It lacks the poignance that gave ballast to the wackiness in Gilliam's Brazil and 12 Monkeys (it often feels more Tim Burton than Gilliam). This may have to do with Thompson's material, but an ode to 1965 Frisco, and the vignette with Ellen Barkin as a scarred truckstop waitress, suggest otherwise. And Gilliam, who has always seemed an anarchist at heart, must have a reason for ending the film with Duke's musing about how the Leary-ites' fallacy was believing that "some force is tending the light at the end of the tunnel." With Depp's delivery, the significance gets lost somewhere inside the cigarette holder.

But Del Toro's walrus-man...man. ✦

AD HOC

Puke Factor

By Tom Weisend

And why is it that stomach-churning ads are telecast at the dinner hour?

LIKE BROADWAY SONGWRITING LEGENDS Kander and Ebb of Chicago fame, I also wonder, "Whatever happened to class?"

TV is getting raunchier, magazines are sexed up and even newspapers have begun using tabloid sex scandals as sources for stories. To compete in this environment, ads are getting downright gross.

As South Park spews on Comedy Central, Jerry Springer and his ilk debase daytime TV and we brace for the Howard Stern TV show, those twin beds Laura and Rob Petrie slept in 35 years ago on The Dick Van Dyke Show seem millennia away. And the days when tampon makers couldn't actually say what their products did are as long gone as Kate Jackson's TV career.

Candie's cleans up.

Advertising's vulgarity low point remains when almost-TV star Jenny McCarthy was on the toilet in a magazine ad for Candie's, the company that makes the renowned footwear that have been nicknamed "fuck me pumps." (See, even I can't resist sinking to a new low.) Some might say her activities on the toilet are perfectly natural, but so is a maggot-infested corpse. I simply don't see how either image helps to sell a product. Candie's might agree; the company has retreated from the ad.

Oddly enough, the products with an innately high putridity factor are rarely the ones that exploit it. Hemorrhoid remedies dance around the fact that you stick them where the sun don't shine. No mouthwash manufacturer has pioneered smell-o-vision to demonstrate the hell of halitosis. And breakfast meat purveyors mercifully stay out of the slaughterhouse. These advertisers should be thanked, especially considering how my stomach churned when the nail fungus people decided to show a cracked and fungus-riddled toenail in their ads.

Ads aimed at teens and adult men to age 25 tend to the most likely to wallow in or near the sewer. Remember when Sega overfed a fat man until he exploded into a zillion chunky pieces across your TV screen? The advertised product was a huge seller in the video game pantheon. Eidos uses a stripper in garters to push its Tomb Raider II video game. How about the cadaver in the Coke commercial who, during his autopsy, will not let the value card out of his rigor-mortised hand? Dr. Scholl's begs pedestrians to "show us your corns." HBO set a recent ad in a roach motel—complete with talking bugs—where business was up because the gluey box added the cable service. Slice soda ushers us to high school biology class where frogs are being dissected and one student eats his specimen. Winston, with the help of computerized images, actually shoves a man's head up his ass in a magazine effort. And what's going on at Diesel? Dead people, fat naked people, sluts and overly pierced creatures are the chosen few to sell this ridiculously overpriced line of jeans and polyester shirts.

A Coke spokesman told Reuters that the autopsy ad is "clearly a spoof." Actually, it's a whole new ad genre—Slice of Death (literally).

The California Department of Public Health did a recent survey that said teens and children are more riveted by shocking and gross ads. This research helped the ad agency that creates anti-smoking ads for Arizona to show the face of a smoking teen disintegrate to the point where she was spitting out maggots. Even our own state health department showed a kid literally cough up an oozy lung onto his girlfriend's dining room table. That it's all in good fun and for a good cause doesn't mitigate the fact that it's vulgar and comes along without warning. ✦

MUSIC

Some Crazy Synergy

By Paul Robicheau

Groovasaurus gets ready to get the grown-up record deal it deserves

MAYBE IT WAS THE MILD WINTER, BUT outdoor festivals are getting the jump on summer. The second weekend of June, in particular, is begging for the long or short road trip, with three simultaneous events along the East Coast.

A superstar lineup including R.E.M., Pearl Jam, Radiohead, Dave Matthews, Patti Smith and the Beastie Boys will split two days at RFK Stadium in Washington, D.C., to give the Tibetan Freedom Concerts the edge on June 13-14. And the Guinness Fleadh consumes the same two days at Randall's Island in New York, with an Irish-slanted cast including Sinead O'Connor, Chumbawamba, Indigo Girls, X, Richard Thompson and Nanci Griffith.

But the sleeper—and the closest among that bunch—is the Berkshire Mountain Music Festival, on a farm in Lanesboro, near Pittsfield. Co-sponsored by Boston's Gamelan Productions and offering late-night films and acoustic jams as well as camping, the June 12-14 bash includes Los Lobos, the Funky Meters, Charlie Hunter, String Cheese Incident, Gibb Droll Band, the Slip and other groups from the neo-hippie scene (it shouldn't be confused with the one-day Hoodoo Bash with String Cheese, Strangefolk, moe. and Leftover Salmon at Nashoba Valley Ski Area June 6).

Also in the cream of the Berkshires pack is Groovasaurus, riding stronger than ever with a new eight-song CD that may yet earn the Boston sextet the record deal it deserves. Just don't tag Groovasaurus as a "jam band."

"Maybe in the first year or two, but that reputation has lasted us for six years," says singer Anita Suhanin. "We kept getting pigeonholed." Possible reasons include the band's birth at a Claddagh blues jam, jumping to other clubs as a headliner with an insulated audience, or a habit of altering the feel of songs each night to avoid boredom. Or perhaps the group's name.

But make no mistake, Groovasaurus is a ROCK band—just one with the organic feel of musicians who breathe together onstage. And after two weakly mixed previous CDs on the group's Pea Patch label, that earthy yet edgy attack has been captured on Hot Horny Amateurs—co-produced by longtime Pat Metheny Group engineer Rob Eaton. "He really got it," says Suhanin, to which bassist Lou Ulrich adds, "He made it sound like us."

"It's gotten heavier and harder," Ulrich says of their sound. "And we wanted to focus on the songwriting." Highlights of the new CD include the funky "Lay Down & Die," atmospheric "Visitor" and "Comin' Back," where Suhanin sensually mulls lover's revenge over a slow, funk-Zeppelin beat.

Led Zeppelin is one band everyone in Groovasaurus considers an influence. "It seemed like they did whatever they wanted to, and I know we would like to do that too," says Ulrich, who has played with drummer Mike Piehl for 11 years. They met at Berklee, as did the rest of the group—rounded out by guitarists Ian Kennedy and Goody, and keyboardist Ryan Claunch.

And they all play out frequently, whether with Groovasaurus (also at Bill's Bar May 30, and the Lizard Lounge after their late-afternoon Berkshires slot June 13), Suhanin's cover-song offshoot Shwang, or sideman gigs with Dennis Brennan, Peter Mulvey, Tim Gearan and Expanding Man.

"We're up there for the music," Ulrich says. "We're not up there for a fashion show or to be cool. We're just listening to each other. There's some crazy synergy that goes on."

"We all make each other laugh," adds Suhanin. "We've never had a major fight. The music keeps us together. It sounds cheesy, but it's does."

Laughter aside, Groovasaurus has finally resolved to shop for a record deal through an entertainment lawyer. "We realized, wait a minute, if we want something to happen, we have to get more aggressive," Ulrich says. "Now we've all agreed that we'd like to move up to the next level."

Last fall, Suhanin even quit her day job with a publishing company, and feels more relaxed for it. "Now I actually open my eyes onstage and laugh and move my feet, which is really unheard of," says the spotlight-shy singer. "But God, this is such an awesome band, and it makes me dance." ✦

Murray at the Grill

By Nini Diana

New pickin's at Armani...Curtis to Aura too...Meet the real Cheese Boy

I'VE LOST MY HEAD SOMEWHERE. IF found please return to 75 Arlington St. It's just that time of year: fun, exciting and full of surprises. The first surprise came this month when Bill Unterstein, chef at Grill 23, announced his plans to leave the restaurant barely a year after being named executive chef. Stepping up to the stove is Jay Murray, who was at Silks at Stonehedge in Tyngsborough.

Aura chef Ed Doyle.

The Armani Café also has a new executive chef, Parker Stafford, who was the managing chef for Figs in Charlestown and Beacon Hill. Stafford created a new menu, which is now in place, for the "trendier than thou" cafe.

While I already mentioned that Ed Doyle is the chef at Aura, the new restaurant at the Seaport Hotel, it's worth noting that Dawn Curtis, daughter of WCVB's Chet Curtis, left her position as communications manager at Le Meridien to serve the same function at the new hotel. At the Meridien Curtis organized prestigious cooking events in the city, including Boston Cooks!, a yearly food and wine festival.

Oh, how New England likes to push the envelope. No matter the weather, we all start wearing shorts in April and pretend that it's warm. People are slightly more clever at Harvey's on St. Botolph Street, where they have decided to open their spacious patio "once the weather is consistently warm," according to a source there. Harvey's has also added a lunch menu for Fridays.

Did you know there is a person who is lovingly referred to as Cheese Boy? It's true, his real name is Matthew Rubiner and he's the cheese buyer for Formaggio Kitchen in Cambridge. Rubiner will be hosting monthly tastings at the gourmet store, the next one taking place on June 16. The theme for the night is salt and butter. Okay, so it's not cheese, but there's a dairy product in there.

The best accompaniment to cheese is, what else? Wine. Impress your friends, win dates and enrich your life. How, you ask? Participate in a wine tasting with Lorenzo Savona, co-owner of Les Zygomates and sommelier extraordinaire. That's French for "knows more than you about wine." Savona will be at the French Library on May 28 to host this event that features the wines of France.

My last official act as writer of this column, oh, I forgot to mention...I'm leaving. Anyway, summer wouldn't be summer without a slew of farmer's markets and food events. The No Frills Fundraiser will kick off the season on June 11. The event, which will raise money for the Chefs Collaborative 2000, an organization that supports local farmers and sustainable agriculture, is organized by some of Boston's top chefs. This year's co-chairs are Ana Sortun of Casablanca and Chris Douglass of Icarus. Sortun and Douglass have recruited many others to manage markets around the city this summer and to participate in the annual retreat being held at Sakonnet Vineyard in Rhode Island. All of these events are open to the public and are a great way to experience the food and style of the city's epicurean experts.

Well, all those of you who were waiting in line for a date with me will have to go home. I'm (sadly) leaving THE IMPROPER and doing something really lunatic, getting married (see Loosely Speaking, page 6). Thank you all for being faithful readers of this sometimes nutty column, and please continue to support the next brave soul who tackles the important issues surrounding the food community. ✦

Ambrosia's ambitious name is justified by its decidedly not mundane offerings

As befits its location on Huntington Avenue, the unofficial boundary between the South End and Back Bay, Ambrosia showcases strengths of both neighborhoods. The grand style of the Back Bay is evoked in its high ceilinged dining room, a striking gilt framed mirror across from its entrance, the elegant curved backs of banquettes, huge windows with long, elegant, opaque eggshell curtains and pale gold marbled walls.

The South End shines through in Ambrosia's creative culinary offerings, accommodating and knowledgeable service and relatively reasonable (except for the wines) prices. Both neighborhoods are reflected in its handsome tables, crisp white nappery, space age flatware, tall stemmed water glasses and oversized plates.

This superb restaurant, the creation of Tony and Doreen Ambrose, is of course a play on words, elongating their surname to a word that means "food for the gods." The ambitious appellation is largely justified, since Ambrosia's cuisine, if not heavenly, is far from mundane. It begins with superb bread, baked on the premises, including a provocatively spiced, onion laden foccaccio. Unfortunately, the wine list is so pricey as to test one's patience. There are only a couple of offerings below $30 and markups are substantial. While we found the Tessera 1995 Old Vine Zinfandel pleasant, with a fruity flavor bouquet, we found its price ($36) decidedly unpleasant—almost five times wholesale.

But while Ambrosia's food prices are substantial, they are not outrageous, especially for a luxe restaurant like this. First courses range, except for the caviar, from $8 to $12, and main courses from $22, with only two over $30. The creativity that goes into their conception and the skill with which that conception is carried out make these tariffs a relative bargain in terms of the price-quality ratio. If there is a theme, it is to follow Marco Polo, marrying the exotic tastes and textures of east Asia to the Mediterranean. The Peruvian purple potato spring roll ($10) featured robustly garlicked mashed potatoes wrapped in crispy paper and swimming in a—dare we say—ambrosial pool of rich, dark truffle oil. Salmon sushi "maki" style ($9) consisted of an eye pleasing array of five hefty triangles of sticky rice clinging to fresh morsels of fish, garnished with tangy ginger and coconut wasabi, accompanied by a small mound of green seaweed noodles, all highlighted by a delicate sauce.

There is also a bar menu that offers less intimidating preparations such as a crispy risotto fritter ($7), a delightfully aromatic pancake of risotto garnished with five or six thin truffle slices. The surface of the pancake was lightly sauteed to a delicate crispness, with the interior remaining moist and luscious. A designer pizza ($9) brought this snack to new heights, with subtle garlic and basil accented tomato sauce, melted cheese, slices of eggplant and an impeccably thin, crispy crust.

Among main courses, we marveled at the perfect texture of a thick boneless filet of steamed halibut with black truffle oil ($26), accompanied by al dente risotto redolent of pecorino cheese and chervil, that subtle, aromatic European annual, with a taste somewhere between tarragon and licorice, frequently used in French preparations designated "aux fines herbes."

Meat choices included a grilled veal t-bone ($32) broiled over fennel-cumin scented firewood, with roasted sweet Brussels sprouts, warm, plump clams, ratatouille and garlic mashed potatoes. The veal steak, seared to seal in its tender juiciness, was inexplicably served standing on end—Ambrosia's one gesture to the tall food fad and the only example of such silliness encountered in the meal. The most expensive item on Ambrosia's menu, rack of lamb ($35), merited its price in terms of both quantity and quality. A prodigious array of substantial ribs, tender, juicy and rare as ordered, was served with a tangy caper and eggplant vinaigrette. Slender, al dente green beans and a magnificent rectangle of sliced potatoes layered with Morbier cheese completed the ensemble.

The size of Ambrosia's main courses, especially if preceded by an appetizer, leave precious little room for dessert. To skip dessert, however, would be a shame, since they were well worth the extra calories. Our favorite was the warm chocolate genoise cake ($9), a luscious, intensely chocolatey confection with a nutmeg truffle center and a pleasantly citric glaze.

Ambrosia on Huntington is one of a handful of Boston restaurants on everyone's "list" and deservedly so. If Zeus and his gang were Bostonians, they would surely be regulars. ✦

WINE

In the Pink

Timely tips to help local palates learn to overcome an aversion to rosé

SPRING IS HERE AND THE TIME IS RIGHT for...drinking a nice chilled glass of flavorful rosé wine. No, I haven't completely lost my mind, not all pink wines are created equal and they don't all taste like Kool-Aid. In fact, there are some delicious, crisp, bone dry rosés coming into season that are absolutely appropriate for casual lighter-style dining.

Aaron Meshon

Although a definite rosé renaissance has been happening in some other cosmopolitan cities, this phenomenon has yet to occur on anything but a micro scale in Boston. Maybe this is the year, but if reaction to a delightful glass of Pinot Noir rosé from Alsace, which was offered at a recent dinner for area gourmets, is indicative, most local palates continue to recoil in horror at the suggestion that they even try wines featuring a light reddish tint.

First, it's important to understand what a rosé is: a wine made from red grapes in which the fermenting juice experiences just minimal contact with the grapeskins before they're discarded. During this time the clear juice absorbs only a fraction of the color and tannin that it would have if the skins had remained in the vat throughout fermentation. How good or bad the wine tastes results from the quality of the grapes that are used. Noble red varietics, like Pinot Noir or Cabernet Franc, havc the potential to make a very flavorful, aromatic wine, particularly when they originate in vineyards that preserve the fresh fruitiness and acidity.

Because rosés have less palate-drying astringent tannins than red wines, they're especially useful for outdoor dining, picnics and warm weather cuisine. If most red wines are plunged into an ice bucket for any period of time, three reactions occur: their flavor complexity vanishes, they thin out and, most important, whatever tannins the wines have are magnified to an extreme, their bitterness blocking out any other remaining flavors. Chilling a low tannin rosé, on the other hand, focuses its sharp fruity red grape acidity, moderates the perception of alcohol and makes it more refreshing. In a sense it's the best of both worlds.

Some of the more interesting rosés you're likely to find include the following categories:

The Loire Valley: The Cabernet Franc-based wines made in the villages of Chinon and Bourgeuil are low in alcohol, outstandingly aromatic and go well with cold chicken or fish dishes garnished with tomatoes.

Spain: Navarra produces full bodied dry, mellow rosados from the Garnacha grape that complement a variety of assertive dishes such as tapenade and sausages.

Burgundy: The village of Marsannay is the quality leader, often producing pale, but quite aromatic Pinot Noir. Delightful with salads, soft cheeses or grilled vegetables.

The Rhone Valley: France's most prestigious rosé is Tavel, which is big and peppery, with some of the same warm plummy tones you encounter in neighboring Chateaneuf du Pape. Drink this wine with fatty game dishes, or poached fleshy fish on the spicy side.

Provence: The region's signature wine, which is so enjoyable with local seafoods and aioli, Provencal Rosé is generally flowery, bone dry and a bit earthy. It's also delicious with grilled, medium-intensity fish such as grouper, or fish stews and soups.

While most of these wines are French, I'm particularly fond of rosés from cool climates in general, including our own. At a tasting of New England wines a few years ago I remember noting the impressivc quality of the rosés, especially those made from Pinot Noir grapes, which were mostly dry and conveyed impressions of tart, spicy cherries. A final note about the wines: They don't age. Drink them young and fresh, because even the best begin to lose their charm a few years after the vintage. ✦

AT NORTH POINT

By JONATHAN SOROFF

Soroff/On DIEGO MESSINA

IN 1968, DIEGO MESSINA CREATED A REVOLUTION BY OPENING HIS SALON, Diego at the Loft, on then un-hip Newbury Street, and introducing cut-blow-and-go hairstyling to a staid Boston that was still stuck in curlers. Throughout the '70s and early '80s, he developed a celebrity clientele and became one himself, helping to form Boston's non-blue-blood cafe society, along with such high-profile pals as nightlife king Patrick Lyons, Kiss-108 owner Richie Balsbaugh and real estate developer Dick Friedman. A lucrative consulting contract with Gillette and his uncanny business acumen allowed Diego to join the jet set and then retire to a life of comfort in the late '80s. Not bad for a high school dropout from East Boston.

Jonathan Soroff: You're retired. What are you doing with your time?
Diego Messina: I'm taking piano lessons. My oldest son owns Steinway, the piano company, so I figured I might as well.
JS: Do you still see clients?
DM: Some.
JS: Anyone noteworthy or famous?
DM: Yeah, but I've always guarded their privacy.
JS: Who's the most famous person whose hair you've ever done?
DM: I used to do Al Pacino's hair. Steven Tyler was a client. All the top models.
JS: Ever done a first lady?
DM: I came very close with Hillary Clinton, on the Vineyard, but they were afraid it would generate publicity. Remember that period, during the first administration, when she changed her hairstyle a couple of times, and that's all the newspapers wrote about?
JS: Any celebrity horror stories?
DM: No. Most talented people are very nice. It's people who aren't talented who give you a hard time.
JS: Describe Boston when you started out.
DM: The only salons on Newbury Street were Elizabeth Arden and Helena Rubenstein, so when I opened the Loft, people thought I was a lunatic. They'd never heard of cutting hair and blowing it dry. But that was the start of Newbury Street as a fashion district. We turned it from one block into four.
JS: Today there're something like 80 salons in eight blocks. How many are owned by someone who started out working for you?
DM: An awful lot. I'm the godfather.
JS: So you spawned all the Scary Hair People of Newbury Street—all those stylists who hang out, looking tragically hip and partying. Any thoughts on them?
DM: I hope they're havin' a good time.
JS: Remember Shampoo, with Warren Beatty, where he seduces all his clients? Before you married, did you do that?
DM: What are you trying to do, get me killed?
JS: As a stylist, you must've heard a lot of gossip.
DM: Never. Those kinds of conversations are more for manicurists.
JS: You live in Lincoln. You have a house on the Vineyard and one in Hawaii. You used to have a one-third ownership of a private jet. What's the best part of success?
DM: The places it's taken me. I worked in Paris, London, Milan. I went everywhere. It was great. A lot of guys used to say, "I'd give up everything to have one day of your life."
JS: How much Gillette stock do you own?
DM: Enough to live well and do what I want.
JS: In terms of stylishness and fashion, how does Boston rate?
DM: I think Boston's pretty cool, don't you? I've been around enough to know. The restaurant scene has caught up. There's a lot of arts and nightlife. People dress nicely. It's a great-looking city.
JS: The story of Sampson and Delilah: Any truth to the idea that a man's virility is connected to his hair?
DM: A lot of rock stars seem to think so.
JS: What happens to all the hair that ends up on salon floors?
DM: It gets thrown away, but over the years, pharmaceutical companies would ask us to bag it so they could use it for research. Another use is to put it around the garden to keep deer away. You have no idea what I go through. I've tried mothballs, blood meal, coyote urine. Hair supposedly works, although if they really want to eat your day lillies, they will.
JS: Why do balding men insist on growing their hair long?
DM: I have no idea. I try to convince them not to. Nobody wants to say something to a guy who's flipping his hair over, but they generally look a lot better with short hair.
JS: Okay, in places like Revere or Saugus, where the hairspray-to-air ratio is dangerously high, do you have any advice for all those girls with enormous hair?
DM: Oh, that's not nice.
JS: But it's true!
DM: Okay, so a few girls have big hair, but I'd rather see 'em using hairspray than drugs.
JS: In the '70s, there were Farrah Fawcett and Dorothy Hamill. More recently, women copied Heather Locklear or Jennifer Aniston's hairdos. Is there anyone in pop culture who you think will be the next big trend-setter?
DM: Those things are really created by the media, who need something to write about. A few women copy a celebrity, and suddenly, it's in People magazine. But women today are so together it's scary. They're individuals. As for trends, my own opinion is that hair'll get a little longer this year, and a little simpler.
JS: If you could only bring one personal grooming product on a trip to the moon, what would it be?
DM: John Sahag—in New York—is the best hairdresser in the world, the most in demand. He's launching a line of products that—knowing him—will be the absolute best, so that's what I'd bring.
JS: Do you think stylists overcharge?
DM: Well, what's a haircut really worth? If it makes someone feel better, it's worth it.
JS: What's the biggest disaster that ever happened to you professionally?
DM: I was very fortunate. No allergic reactions or mishaps with scissors, or people's hair falling out. For all those years, I was lucky. ✦

ULTRA INSANE

BY JENNIFER JORDAN

"Do you think the water is deep enough to drown in?" Bonnie asked, seeming to half-hope that it was, as she limped across the narrow bridge just six feet above a shallow creek.

She was asking because she'd had enough. It had become just too painful.

What had brought this pretty, forty something wife and mother to suggest dying might be better than going on?

The realization that after 19 hours of competition in the Vermont 100 Mile Endurance Race she still had almost an entire marathon to go.

This is ultrarunning.

In a world where a 26.2-mile marathon is the ultimate running challenge, the sport of ultrarunning is in a galaxy of its own. And that galaxy is surprisingly large. Fred Pilon, publisher and editor of the Otis, Massachusetts-based UltraRunning Magazine (with 5,000 paid subscribers), says nationwide the sport involves 20,000 runners in 335 annual races, and internationally the numbers increase nearly sixfold.

Ultrarunning is defined as any race covering a distance beyond that of a marathon. While historically many were run on tracks, where competitors ran for 12 or 24 hours non-stop and the one who went the farthest won, most now are run on mountain trails, beginning before sunup and lasting an entire day. Or more. A 100-mile race typically takes 20-30 hours to complete, longer for those in the high-altitude ranges of the West.

ULTRARUNNING IS A SPORT THAT COMES WITH A WARNING

Dear Discount Dick,

We have a problem. You won't take a trade-in on the Tommy Armour 845s I bought from you a couple years back. But Wayland Golf will. And they'll give me demo sets to play on my home course, before I buy, so I can decide which new clubs I really like best. And once I decide, they'll fit me to make sure they're perfect.

You won't do any of this. But you will let me drive all the way out to nowhere to pay the same prices I'll pay at Wayland Golf.

Thanks for caring, Discount Dick. Oh, and have a nice day.

Your buddy,

Ray

This is a sport that comes with a warning label. The webpage for upcoming Nipmuck Trail Marathon in Connecticut begins: "Danger! It is possible to get a serious immobilizing injury hours away from medical attention!!" Sometimes warnings aren't enough. In the 100-mile endurance races there are a series of medical checkpoints where your blood pressure, heart rate, weight and kidney function are monitored. Yes, you actually pee in a cup to make sure enough of what's going in is coming out. If not, you're out. At the Vermont 100 a man held a vial of his reddish urine as he tried to argue his case for continuing on, in spite of his own impending kidney failure.

FEELING THE BURN: Stephen Peckiconis (above), Robert Nagie (opposite left), Gail Ieraradi (opposite right).

The question, of course, is why. Why would people run for 30 hours over mountain ranges with flashlights strapped to their heads knowing that they could be steps away from physical and mental shut down from too many miles run and too few gallons drunk and calories eaten? Who are these people that embrace a sport that can condemn even an accomplished marathoner or dedicated athlete to a state of physical collapse? Are they freaks of nature? Some sort of science experiment gone wrong? No, actually they're surprisingly normal. But like any extremists, they are a complex combination of personal motivations and physical skills that separate them from the average runner.

For Stephen Peckiconis of Roslindale, it's simple. He loves it and he's built for it. At 6'1" and 150 pounds, Peckiconis is tall for an ultrarunner, but it's all leg and lung.

"Running long distance doesn't hurt me. In fact, I'm amazed at those who can do it fighting pain. For me, it's just a pleasure," he says.

Peckiconis, 39, is the local ultrarunning community's hero. He's won more than his fair share of races, but he's the last to list his accomplishments, and the first to mentor an aspiring ultrarunner. With a background in marathon running, he found ultrarunning almost by accident.

"I looked around me at the end of marathons at everybody limping around, and always felt like I had more in me, more in my legs. So I began running ultras to find the competition, from others and from myself."

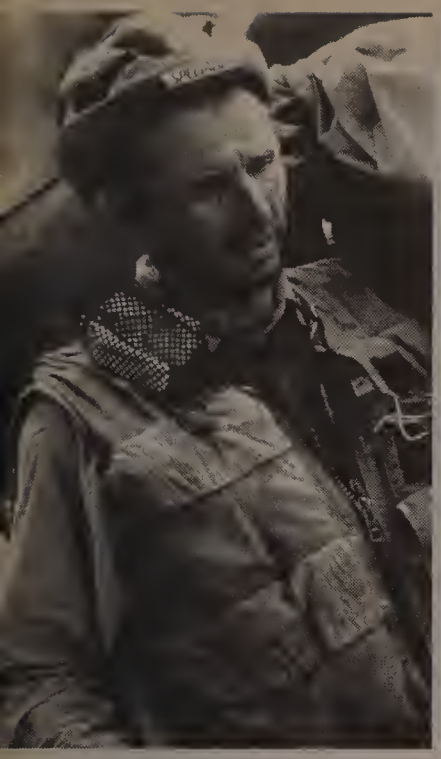
He found it. Even though a veteran of a handful of Vermont 50s and 100s, several 100- kilometer races (62 miles), many 12- and 24-hour track events, countless road marathons and his favorite race, the 13,000-runner, 56-mile Comrades Marathon in South Africa, Peckiconis remains refreshingly rational.

"My philosophy is that you should always have control at the finish line," he says. "It doesn't mean anything to me to finish in bad shape, dehydrated and injured. To do it and walk away feeling great, rather than just barely survive. Finishing is not that important. It's reaching my goal of running the best race I can run."

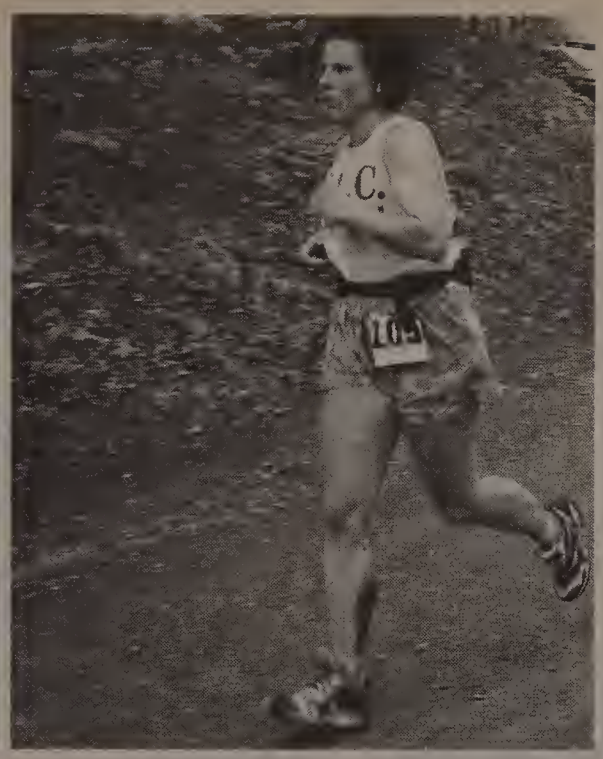
For Gail Ierardi of Georgetown, Massachusetts, the goal is seeing how far and fast she can go. Which is very far and very fast. The 31-year-old occupational therapist has run three Vermont 50s, winning her first in 9:49, then placing second and fourth in consecutive years. In April she won the Bull Run 50-miler in Virginia, setting a new course record of 8:47. Now she's setting her sights on Vermont and her first 100-miler in July.

"My first goal is to finish," Ierardi says. "Second is to do it in 24 hours or under. Third...well whatever else happens is great."

Like many ultrarunners, Ierardi found trail running and ultra distances after road marathons started to bore her.



"It's a whole different mind set," she says. "You're on the trails, it's easier on your body and it's very low key."



Fred Pilon agrees: "Ultrarunning provides a chance to get away from the road running scene, with its boredom and pavement pounding, to a more scenic environment where the race has also become a vacation destination because they are held in such beautiful places. Ultrarunning has become a lot more than just a race."

But how do you train for a race that lasts 30 hours? In training for a marathon, the common wisdom is that if you can train at half the distance, you should be able to finish the race. But with the distance ratcheted up to 100 miles, that strategy doesn't apply. Many ultrarunners train lightly through the week, perhaps running 7-10 miles two or three times, and then running long, often day-long, distances on the weekend. One of the premier training events where you can test your ability to run 100 miles is at the Western States training camp. Over three consecutive days you run the entire 100-mile course, logging 33 miles a day. After that weekend, you're pretty aware of whether you are a contender for the entire 100 miles.

Where does this all end? First a handful of marathoners decided they had a few more miles in them at the finish and the 30- and 50-mile races were born. And like everything

American, the lure of pushing the envelope led to the 100-mile events. But it's never enough. Now a new wave of ultras has begun: Double 100s. That's right. People run from the finish to the start and then to the finish again. Two hundred miles. But for some, even that wasn't enough. So the distances were increased, multiple sports were added and the race was extended over many days. Now you have the latest craze: The Eco Challenge, which makes the 100-mile races look like a training jog.

Robert Nagle, 39, of Cambridge, did just that. When he was training for his first Eco Challenge in 1995, he ran 131 miles around a 1/4-mile track in a 24-hour race. Here's the math: 524 times around. He won the race.

What's the Eco Challenge, you ask? Well, if you were beginning to think ultra-runners are a few sandwiches shy of a picnic, "Ecoists" don't even pack a lunch. The Eco Challenge is an expedition-competition for team adventurers. Each team consists of four men and women (including at least one of the opposite sex) who race approximately 300 miles non-stop (24 hours a day) for as long as it takes, anywhere from 6 to 10 days, and typically engage in five-eight non-motorized sports. Without support. No snacks along the way. No nice water stations with cheerful volunteers handing out orange slices and Gatorade. Running, mountain biking, swimming, canoeing, kayaking, white-water swimming and rafting, horseback riding and hang-gliding are among the sports involved. Even camel riding is being added to the 1998 Eco in Morocco. Hell, why not add mountain inline skating? That's right, inline skating along mountain trails is soon being added to the list of "adventure" sports, which Nagle must now learn.

So, the question begs: Is Nagle insane?

"Well," he laughs, as he readies himself for departure to the Outer Hebrides Challenge in Scotland, "it's a slippery slope. When I first heard of the races they sounded crazy, but then you compete in one and survive, and you go on, and just keep going. It's a discovery process of what is possible."

For these men and women, Eco adventurists and ultrarunners, that discovery is not only what is possible in the mountains, seas and deserts. It is also about the discovery of their inner beast, their limits. What drives these athletes beyond merely being athletic?

"There's no place left on the planet that is unexplored. The last place is within us," Nagle says.

It's a place where few can go, and when those that can get there, they want to go farther, whether it's team racing for 10 straight days, or running virtually alone for 30 hours. But for some, it's just about a great run, and feeling okay at the end of it, even when it's 50 or 100 miles long.

"We're kind of a crazy breed," Ierardi admits.

The sport itself is tough, but getting involved is not. There are more than 20 running clubs in New England. To find information about the clubs and their upcoming races, check out the New England Trail Running website at www.ziplink.net/-et/index.htm. ✦

Jennifer Jordan is a freelance writer and reporter living in Cambridge. Her ultra workout is usually limited to juggling four jobs, but she occasionally competes in a handful of 30 and 50-mile trail races as well as various triathlons throughout the year.

BOSTON in HEAT

HERE'S HOW TO MAKE THE MOST OF SUMMER IN THE CITY

BOSTON PUBLIC GARDEN

FENWAY PARK

IT'S A LOVE-HATE RELATIONSHIP THAT OUR CITY SHARES with warm weather. On one hand, we've got one seriously Puritanical past to live up to; on the other, few streets anywhere in the country outdo the hedonistic sprawl of, say, Newbury Street's sidewalk scene in July. So let's face it. We may be best known for our sober fall foliage, but confronted with summer's sensuous intoxications—enormous tulip patches in the Public Garden, hormonally charged, barely clad sun worshippers on the Esplanade, fresh lobsters being cracked open on the waterfront—sobriety seems damned wrongful. Here's the definitive guide to dealing with Boston when it sheds its inhibitions and goes into heat.

Parks

Once the trees take to flowering and the city gardeners to grooming, the Emerald Necklace, our verdant citywide string of parks, rivals the sparkle on any bauble from Shreve's. Most are open from sunrise to sunset.

Arnold Arboretum 125 Arborway, Jamaica Plain (617) 524-1718. The blend of cultivated gardens, wildflowers and trees (including more than 250 kinds of lilacs and a legendary rhododendron path) renders this 265-acre National Historic Landmark one of the necklace's brightest gems.

Back Bay Fens between Park Drive and The Fenway, Boston (617) 635-4505. Now home to rose gardens, dogwoods and baseball fields, this fertile stretch of green belies its former life as a swamp.

Boston Common, Charles Street, Boston (617) 635-7389. A 50-acre urbane enclave of trees, paths and recreational facilities—including the frog pond, which is turned into a fountain come summer.

Franklin Park, between Walnut and Blue Hill Ave., Dorchester (617) 635-7383. More than 500 acres (the necklace's biggest park) that include a zoo, an 18-hole golf course and bikepaths.

The Jamaicaway, between Arborway and Riverway, Jamaica Plain (617) 635-7396. A ballfield, walking trails and a pond with rowboat rentals are the draw here.

The Public Garden, Charles Street, Boston (617) 635-7383. This is it: America's first botanical garden, complete with Boston's signature Swan Boats and the kiddie-pleasing "Make Way for Ducklings" sculpture.

The Riverway, Jamaica Pond, Jamaica Plain (617) 727-5114. The peaceful park offers a three-mile stretch around its ponds.

Swimming Pools

On those city days so horribly humid that mere breathing evokes sweat, a cold shower just won't cut it. Time to either fill your briefs with ice cubes or hightail it to the nearest MDC pool. We find the latter—rowdy kids and bellowing lifeguards aside—the less jarring option. And they're free.

BOSTON:

Lee Memorial Pool, Charles Street, 523-9746.

There's also the cushy, private pool at the Colonnade Hotel. Fork over the $12 entry fee and all amenities—including a fully loaded bar—are at your disposal. 120 Huntington Ave., Boston, 424-7000.

BRIGHTON:

Brighton/Allston Pool, North Beacon Street, 524-2956.

Reilly Memorial Pool, Cleveland Circle, 277-7822.

CAMBRIDGE:

McCrehan Memorial Pool, Alewife Brook Parkway, 354-9154.

Veterans Memorial Pool, Memorial Drive, 354-9381.

SOMERVILLE:

Dilboy Field Pool, Alewife Brook Parkway, 623-9321.

Latta Brothers Memorial Pool, McGrath Highway at Broadway, 666-9236.

WEST ROXBURY:

Phelan Memorial Pool, VFW Parkway, 322-9512.

Boating

Not for nothing are we a city on the water. Or, at least that's what any aqua-zealot worth his or her neoprene claims. But with all the water instruction and gear rental offered in these parts, even neophytes have no excuse for shoving off and seeing how clean the city looks from offshore. Note that with membership, Community Boating, 21 Embankment Rd., Boston, (617) 523-1038, offers boating and instruction in almost all of the below categories.

SAILING:

Boston Harbor Sailing Club, Rowes Wharf, Boston (617)345-9202. With tempting amenities (more than 65 boats to choose from, plus access to dockside dining) and a slew of sailing courses, this is the largest sailing school in New England. Course and boat rental costs vary; call for prices.

Boston Public Sailing, 95 Marginal St., East Boston (617)567-6400. You need to buy membership (fees vary) for access here, but you'll also enjoy unlimited use of vessels, help from the well-trained staff and free parking.

Boston Sailing Center, 54 Lewis Wharf, Boston (617) 227-4198. Course and membership fees vary.

Courageous Sailing Center, Charlestown (617) 242-3821. This nonprofit effort provides a mix of sailing courses in the Charlestown Navy Yard.

McDonough Sailing Program, Castle Island, South Boston (617) 727-8865. This MDC- and Massport-run program teaches children ages 8-17 how to sail, free of charge.

CANOES AND KAYAKS:

Charles River Canoe and Kayak, 2401 Commonwealth Ave., Newton (617) 965-5110. Kayak and canoe rentals are available by the hour, day or weekend. Call for details.

Essex River Basin Adventures, 66 Main St., Essex (978) 768-3722. Daily guided kayaking tours, gear included, run past Crane Beach and Hog Island.

South Bridge Boathouse, 496 Main St., Concord (978) 369-9438. Rental options are extensive here, from kayaks and canoes to motorized craft.

SHELLS AND SCULLS:

Community Rowing, Inc., 10 Nonantum Rd., Newton (617) 782-9091. Catch the six-week rowing intro course ($150) or the sculling course ($90). Drop $100 on the membership fee and you'll have a seat on CRI's regatta-attending team

Cygnet Rowing Club, Charles St., Newton (617) 876-8653. At Charles River Canoe and Kayak, this relatively new organization specializes in teaching beginners. The recreational rowing course ($250), which includes two weeks of free boat time, is a steal.

Walden Pond, Route 126, Concord (978) 369-6699. Bring your own vessel (no gas motors allowed) to Thoreau's old stomping ground and the $2 parking fee will be your only expense. You didn't expect to go broke at the original site of Henry David's frugality, did you?

Golf Courses

OK, so the de rigueur lime green polos and plaid garments flatter pretty much no one. Even the womens' outfits tend to look like Talbots on crack. But fashion foibles aside, not all golf culture's stuffy, preppy and pricey. Herewith, our super-extensive uber-listing of public courses around Boston, its 'burbs, the Cape

Surfer Scene

Bruce Old, the manager of Newbury Street's Patagonia store caught the bug four years ago. Jim G. has been "getting wet" since tagging along with an early-bird surfer neighbor. More and more Bostonians have joined the surfing movement in recent years, most heading to hidden coves in Rhode Island and the rocky beaches of Rye and Hampton, N.H. According to those in the know, the places to truly hang ten are known only by a select few. Everyone is in agreement that Hampton's David Cropper of Cinnamon Rainbows (603-929-SHOP) is the area's surfer-guru-god. His store not only carries an extensive array of surfwear, but Cropper has been manufacturing his own line of surfboards for the past 15 years. A one-stop haven for those seeking to "hit the lip," Cinnamon Rainbows runs a 24-hour surf report (603-926-WAVE) that provides the latest weather and wave conditions. Cropper also supervises an extensive surf-school that accommodates everyone from beginner to pro.

In Boston, the place for surfing aficionados is Patagonia (346 Newbury St.), where manager Old says everyone from kids to seniors come in to buy gear and check out the store's selection of surfboards. Like many surfers, once he tried it, Old just couldn't stop himself. He regularly visits secret sites in Mass. and has gone so far as Mexico to "cut back." According to Old, "Surfing creates a great sense of community—surfers by nature are a very social group." Matters are helped by the fact that New England surfers have difficulty being accepted by West Coast surfers. Jim G. recalls how his Mass.-plated car was regularly vandalized when he hit the waves out west. "In California, location is very heavy and surfers guard their territory from outsiders." It's one thing for a fellow Californian to crash the party, it's another for an East Coast surfer to seek inclusion.

Surfers' rap as mere beach bums is countered by the Mass. chapter of the Surfrider Foundation. The grassroots environmental group provides surfers and those who love them with information regarding beaches and surfing protocol, and regularly meets to help clean up polluted surf havens. Exercise

Hard-core fitness freak or not, you surely know what summer's really all about, don't you? It's all about showing skin. Outdoor sports not only provide opportunity to do just that, the urge to get out and keep moving also keeps you in shape to look even better doing it next time. So lose the excuses, already; here's where to just do it and where to buy the goods.

HIKING:

Hammond Pond Reservation Primarily the turf of rock climbers, this spot in the Newton Conservation Area also features a variety of well-marked paths.

Broadmoor Wildlife Sanctuary 280 Eliot St., Natick (508) 235-3929. Fowl and waterfalls make this nature preserve on the Charles River a picturesque hike. Entry costs $3.

Middlesex Fells Reservation Mostly for hard-core hikers; climbs can be steep.

Blue Hills Reservation Hillside Street, Milton (617) 698-1802. You'll find more than 200 hiking trails as well as two golf courses, ponds and rentable cabins in these 6,000 acres. The highest hill peaks at 635 feet.

GETTING TEED OFF

RUNNING AND WALKING:

Chestnut Hill Reservoir, Chestnut Hill. A fairly flat, 1.5-mile course near Boston College campus.

Castle Island, William J. Day Blvd., South Boston (617) 635-4505. The island, a 22-mile park, boasts a network of shoreline paths with water views certain to inspire.

Heartbreak Hill, Commonwealth Avenue, Newton. Here's the 3.5-mile jaunt that every Boston Marathon runner dreads. Starting at the intersection of Route 16 and Comm. Ave., the road turns into a series of steep hills guaranteed to wind even serious runners.

CYCLING:

Cambridge Linear Parks, Fitchburg Cutoff, Cambridge (617) 349-6229.

Charles River Reservation, Science Park, Boston (617) 727-5114. Just watch out for the biking speed limits here.

Fresh Pond, Fresh Pond Parkway, Cambridge (617) 349-4793. Quiet and pretty, right off Concord Avenue.

Pierre Lallement Bicycle Path, Boston (617) 727-0057. Named after the inventor of the bicycle, this 4-mile-long strip starts at the Forest Hills T stop.

Stony Brook Reservation, West Roxbury (617) 727-5114. Runs between West Roxbury and Roslindale, near the Dedham border.

INLINE SKATING:

You'll find plenty of space for this along Memorial Drive and the Esplanade (see sidebar). Those ready to commit can find a shiny new pair of skates at City Sports, 480 Boylston St., Boston (617) 467-3900. If you'd rather rent, head to Eric Flaim's Motion Sports, 349 Newbury St., Boston (617) 247-3284, where daily rates average $15, and lessons are available for about $40. Instruction can be found at a similar price at Beacon Hill Skate School, 135 Charles St., Boston (617) 482-7400.

TENNIS:

Courts range from the tony and oh-so-civilized (as found at Mount Auburn Club, 57 Coolidge Ave., Watertown 617-923-2255) to the more egalitarian (read: free) public setups around town. If the latter's more your game, swing by the Charlesbank tennis courts, Charles St., Boston (617) 727-4708.

FISHING:

Given all the dangerous practices in this world that don't require permits, we'll grant that fishing licenses as a concept seem to border the absurd. But since their basic purpose is to cut out poaching, just consider them steps to keeping some fine, finned friends around for you to catch next year. Fetch one (they're required for freshwater fishing only) from the Fisheries, Wildlife and Environmental Law Enforcement Agency at 100 Cambridge St., Boston (617) 727-3151. Then go fetch a fish, be it trout from Walden Pond or perch from the Charles. Stripers and bluefish can also be readily pulled from Boston Harbor at John J. McCorkle Fishing Pier on Day Boulevard (617) 727-5114.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Fenway Park, 4 Yawkey Way, Boston (617) 267-1700.

Sure, they string us along only to dash our hopes every season. But for most masochistic Red Sox fans, that's become part of the game itself. The following games will all be held at Fenway Park. Some, like the Yankess, are sold out.

FIELD OF DREAMS

The Cape Cod Baseball League is baseball as we dream it: innocent, exuberant, intimate and propitious. Here, in what is recognized as the nation's pre-eminent amateur summer league, fans lounge on grassy inclines through mid-summer's long dusk watching the collegiate stars of today and the major league stars of tomorrow compete for the fun of the game and the notice of the scouts. Among the many major leaguers who honed their skills on ol' Cape Cod are the White Sox's Albert Belle (then Joey), Yankee Chuck Knobloch and the Red Sox's own Nomar Garciaparra. No one is charged admission and no one is paid a salary. They even use wooden bats. Check The Cape Cod Times or call league President Judy Scarafile, (508) 362-3036, for the schedule in the Cape's larger towns for July and August.

BOWLING

If retro camp is as hot as everyone seems to believe, then bowling may just be our chicest sport. Marked mostly by carpeted walls, an abundance of plastic seats, greasy snacks and polycster-clad players, most bowling alleys sport more cheesy charm than you can hurl a candlepin at. A few cases in point: the Sacco Bowl-Haven, 45 Day St., Somerville (617) 776-0552, an old-fashioned alley of 16 candlepin lanes near Davis Square; the smaller, 8-laned Ball Square Bowling Alley, 662 Boston Ave., (781) 306-0716; Lucky Strike Lanes, 289 Adams St., Dorchester (617) 436-2660; Boston Bowl Family Fun Center, 820 Morrissey Blvd., Dorchester (617) 825-3800; and Lanes and Games, 195 Concord Tpke., Cambridge (617) 876-5533.

The best choice in modernized, trendier exceptions: the Ryan Family Amuscment Center, 82 Lansdowne St., Boston (617) 267-8495. It features laser-lit "Mystic" bowling (offered every Friday and Saturday night at 9:30) and a pool hall-cum-video arcade.

BILLIARD PARLORS

Waitresses in short black skirts almost secm to outnumber the pool tablcs (of which there are 22) at The Rack, 20 Clinton St., Boston (617) 725-1051. Forty-two pool tables fill Kenmore Square's Boston Billiard Club, 126 Brookline Ave., Boston (617) 536-7665. Also try Flattop Johnny's, 1 Kendall Square, Cambridge (617) 494-9565, and that high-tech gamefest, Jillian's, 145 Ipswich St., Boston (617) 437-0300.

THEATER

The Huntington Theatre, 264 Huntington Ave., Boston (617) 266-7900. Through June 14, Eugene O'Neill's comedy, Ah, Wilderness!, will play.

Emerson Majestic Theatre, 221 Tremont St., Boston (617) 824-8000. Running May 30-31, Sentimental Journey; June 2-6, Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Dance Company; July 16-19, Madame Butterfly; July 23-26, The Barber of Seville.

Shubert Theatre, 265 Tremont St., Boston (617) 482-9393. Playing May 19-June 14, Bring in 'Da Noise, Bring in 'Da Funk; May 14-17, Mikhail Baryshnikov with White Oak Dance Project.

Wang Center for the Performing Arts, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617) 482-9393. Showing through April 30, Swan Lake; July 2-August 23, Beauty and the Beast; and on June 20 only, Amy Grant.

Beaches

Kids will scream around you, horseflies will nip you and the sun will turn you into a blazing, melanoma-bound little cinder. And you'll love every minute of it, because there's simply nothing more definitively summer than the scrape of sand on your skin, salt water in your cuts and the fake-coconut stench of tanning lotion.

EAST BOSTON:

Constitution Beach, Orient Heights (bathhouse and concessions)

SOUTH BOSTON:

Carson Beach, on Day Blvd.
Castle Beach, on Day Blvd. (restrooms, concessions)
City Point, on Day Blvd.

Duxbury Beach, Gurnet Rd., Duxbury (781) 934-2866. (Bathhouse. Parking $7.)

THE CAPE:

We could sit here and waste your entire summer telling you about every one of Cape Cod's seemingly endless beach options, or wc could point you toward the most accessible of them. Come summer, transportation to and from the area abounds. Plymouth & Brockton buses leave South Station to Sagamore, Barnstable or Hyannis. (Tickets: $11 one-way or $20 roundtrip. 508-746-0378.) Also from South Station, Bonanza buses head to Bourne ($9 one-way, $17 roundtrip), Falmouth or Woods Hole ($14 for one-way, $24.95 roundtrip. 800-556-3815.) And Cape Air will take you from Logan to Hyannis (800-352-0714.) By car, take Route 3 to the Sagamore Bridge.

National Seashore beaches in Eastham, Wellfleet, Truro and Provincetown. (Parking is $5 a day for cars, $3 for bikes.)

Barnstable beaches (Parking is $15 annually to residents with sticker, $8 a day and $35 a week to any without.)

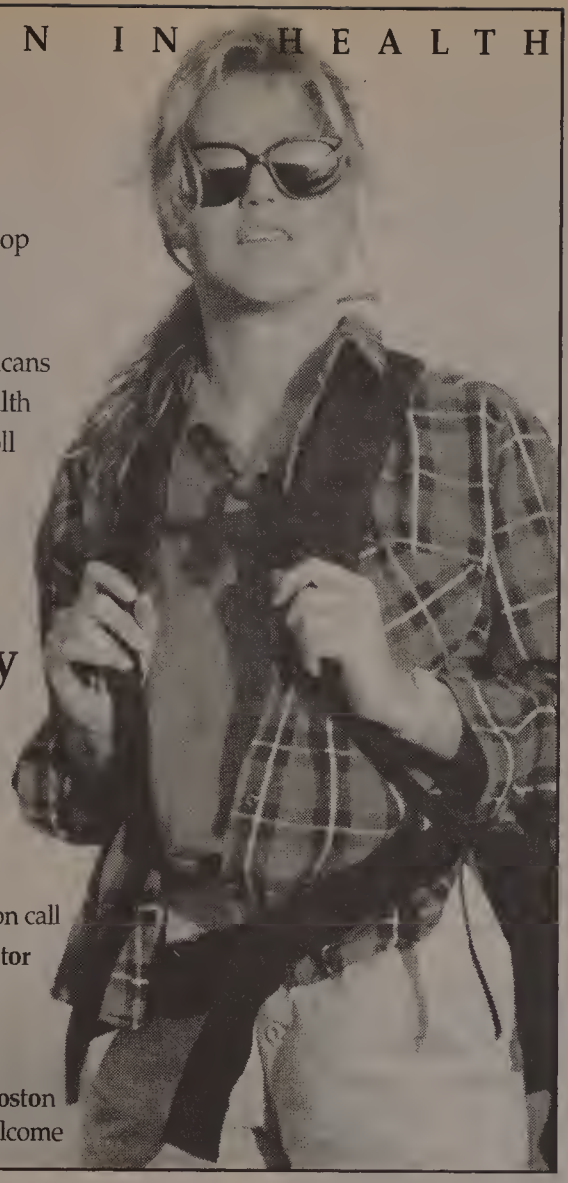
Harwich beaches ($5 per weekday and $10 on weekends.)

Provincetown beaches ($5 per day and $2 for bikes.)

Sandwich beaches ($4 a day.)

Truro beaches ($10 a day for non-residents and $15 a



THE BARE FACTS

We've already established that summer's all about showing skin. And if that's true, then bare-it-all outings must epitomize the season. Really, why even bother with the relative pretense and expense of bathing suits when au naturel is an option? Shores on the Vineyard (Moshup Beach on Gay Head), the Cape (South Cape State Park, Mashpee) and in western Mass. (on the Westfield River in Cummington) allow (but aren't exclusively) stitch-free sunning and swimming. Several organizations run group trips to nude-only sites. The area's biggest group, the Pilgrim Naturists, coordinate in-the-buff hiking, camping, spelunking, surfing and waterskiing trips. To become a member, send $30 to P.O. Box 273, Boston, MA 02132-0003. And there's always Nudefest '98, held August 14-16 at the Berkshire Vista Resort (featuring, among other all-nude pursuits, DJ dances, hiking and shuffleboard) in West Stockbridge. Day fees are $20 per person on the weekdays and $30 on the weekend. Call (413) 738-5154 for additional price information and reservations.

THE ISLANDS

MARTHA'S VINEYARD:

Ferries leave from several spots on the Cape: Falmouth, Woods Hole and Bourne. Drivers can take Route 3 to the Sagamore Bridge, go to Hyannis and follow Route 6. To go to Falmouth or Woods Hole, take Route 6 west to Buzzards Bay (Bourne). Cross the Bourne Bridge and follow Route 28 South. It's a 45-minute ferry ride from Woods Hole. If you're planning to bring your car to the island, call the Steamship Authority at (508) 477-8600 to reserve a space. For tickets the day of travel, call (508) 477-SHIP. Hy-Line Cruises leave from Hyannis. (No cars are allowed on the ferry.) By plane, Cape Air (800-352-0714) flies from Boston, Hyannis and Nantucket. USAir Express (800-428-4322) makes runs from Hyannis and Nantucket. Both go into the Martha's Vineyard Airport. By charter, Air New England (508) 693-8899, Direct Flight Inc. (508) 693-4646 and Ocean Wings (508) 693-5942 all provide service.

The following beaches are free and don't require permits. All parking is free.

Menemsha Public Beach, Chilmark
Fuller Street Beach, Fuller Street, Edgartown
Katama Beach, Katama Rd., Edgartown
Lighthouse Beach, North Water St., Edgartown
Moshup Beach, Gay Head
Philbin Beach, Gay Head
Lobsterville Beach, Gay Head
Easterville Beach, Oak Bluffs
Oak Bluffs Town Beach, Oak Bluffs
Joseph Sylvia State Beach, Beach Rd ., Oak Bluffs,
Lake Tashmoo Town Beach, Vineyard Haven
Owen Park Beach, Vineyard Haven
Tisbury Town Beach, Vineyard Haven

NANTUCKET:

As with the Vineyard, the ferry lines to take are through the Steamship Authority (the 2.15-hr. trip is $11 for adults, $5.50 for children and $5 for bikes) and Hy-Line Cruises (it's $11 for adults, $5.50 for children and $4.50 for bikes). Hy-Line also offers a year-round, high speed catamaran ferry. Call (508) 788-0404 for details. Cape Air and USAir Express fly from Boston (see Martha's Vineyard, above, for contact information) and trips are made from Hyannis by Colgan Air (800 272 5488) and Island Airlines (800-635-8787). All fly to Nantucket Memorial Airport. For chartered flights, contact Air New England (508 945-8899) or Chatham Air Charter (508-325-5548).

The following beaches have no fees, permits or parking costs.

Jetties Beach, North Beach St. (Lifeguards, bathhouse, tennis and volleyball courts.)

Brant Point, Easton Street.

Children's Beach, Harbor View Way. (Park, playground, gametables, bandstand, lifeguards and bathhouse.)

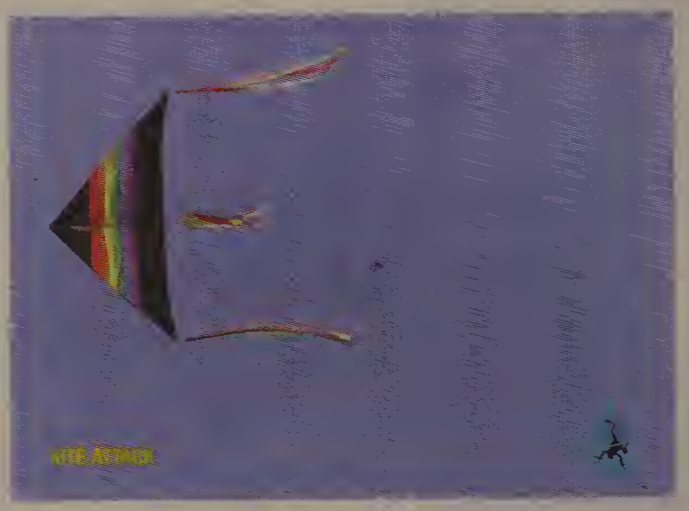
Francis Street Beach, Washington Street.

Surfside Beach, Surfside Road. (Lifeguard, bathhouse.)

Cisco Beach, Hammock Pond Road. (Lifeguard.)

Madaket Beach, Madaket Road. (Lifeguard.)

Siasconset Beach, Siasconset Road. (Lifeguard)



HARBOR ISLANDS:

The handful of pretty, historic islands dotting Boston Harbor are open through Columbus Day. Central to all is Georges Island, reachable via the Bay State Cruise Co. (723-7800) at Long Wharf. It's a $7.50 ride there, and all water taxis to neighboring islands are free. Friends of Boston Harbor (740-4290) also sends out tours.

The Esplanade

Saturated with inline skaters, bikers, runners, strollers, scantily clad sun-addicts, singles on the make and quite a few mallards, this central stretch along the Charles is about as Riveria as Boston gets. Bypass it on either side of the river and you'll be missing one of the best people-peeping shows running.

On the Boston bank, the grand mishmash of pyrotechnics, picnic baskets and Boston Pops tunes that is July 4th takes place at the Hatch Shell (617-727-1300). Various shows—live rock and jazz, movies on Friday nights—as well as festivals continue throughout the summer. Across the lawn sits Café Esplanade, where the hungry masses nosh al fresco and relish their prime spots in the shade. Just up the path (riddled with more fast-moving Rollerblades and running shoes than you can count) toward the Museum of Science, are a handful of separate docks, each covered with a thick layer of exhibitionist, sunbathing bodies.

Keep heading that way and you'll come to Community Boating, the source of all those adorable little white sailboats flecking the water.

Cross the river (take the Mass. Ave. bridge, where foot traffic's at a premium, for the best spectating and/or ogling) to Cambridge, and the scene continues. On Sundays and bank holidays (11am to 7pm from late April through the end of October), Memorial Drive shuts down to vehicles, allowing fast food stands, booths renting inline skate equipment, joggers, skaters and cyclists to take over from Western Avenue to the Eliot Bridge.

Odd stuff

Sometimes the road less traveled is just a better ride—especially if you're doing it on a V2 Evolution Engine Harley. Everyone from paintball commando to t'ai chi masters and even relatively sedate overnight campers alike can find adventure close by.

T'AI CHI:

The Cambridge Center for Adult Education offers outdoor beginner courses in this rejuvenating Eastern exercise, starting in mid-June. Call (617) 547-6789 for more information. The eight-week session emphasizing Yang-style practice costs $109. Brookline T'ai Chi also offers a range of introductory (indoor) courses, but in the Wu-style. The seven-week courses average about $100. Call (617) 277-2975.

PAINTBALL:

The city's best splattering can be done with semiautomatic carbines, careful-but-generally unobtrusive referees and an imaginative indoor playing field at Boston Paintball, 131 Beverly St., Boston (617) 742-6612. Cost is $39 per player, plus an extra $5 for rental jumpsuits. Another option is Randolph Paintball, 410 South St., Randolph (781) 986-2255. Outdoor games can be played for $40 per person.

MOTORCYCLE RALLIES:

Each year the Laconia Motorcycle Rally and Race Week turns its hosting New Hampshire town into a gargantuan swirl of throbbing engines, bike shows, tattoo contests, road races and black Mascorro leather. And this year's no exception; the festival—one of the largest in the nation—will roll into town on June 14 until the 21st. For details call (603) 366-2000.

PAGAN RITUALS:

Celebrating its 20th year, the annual Rites of Spring festival in Williamsburg, Mass., has been extended by two days this year. May 18-25, more than 500 earth worshippers will congregate for ritual moonlit fires, much drumming, chanting, tribal dancing. Prices to attend vary. Gall (413) 238-4240 for details.

WHITE WATER RAFTING:

Self-motivated organizers and seasoned oarsmen can head to the waters of Mohawk Trail State Forest, Charlemont, Mass., (413) 339-5504. If you'd rather someone else do the dirty work (including guide hiring and transportation coordination), give Boston Ski & Sports Club, 70 Birmingham Pkwy. in Brighton a call at (617) 789-4070. They also plan camping and hiking trips, as well as offering summer sports leagues.

OVERNIGHT CAMPING:

Of course Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine have campgrounds galore, but you also needn't traverse the Massachusetts state line to find a decent spot to drive your stake into. Bonny Rigg Camping Club, Becket (413) 623-5366, has about 200 sites that range from $16 to $21 per day. More than 100 sites at about $20 a day are available at Sunsetview Farm Camping Area, 57 Town Farm Rd., Monson (413) 267-9269. Likewise the Wagon Wheel Camping Area, 909 Wendell Rd., Warwick (978) 544-3425.

On the Cape, you may have to make a reservation right away, but Nickerson State Park in Brewster on Route 6A has more than 400 sites at a mere $6 per night. Call (508) 896-3491. Also, Coastal Acres Camping Court, Provincetown (508) 487-1700, has about 100 sites ranging from $21 to $28, and Horton's Camping Resort, North Truro (508) 487-1220, charges between $16 and $24 for its 200-odd sites. If you're looking for island camping, head to the Vineyard: Webb's Camping Area, Barnes Rd., Oak Bluffs (508) 693-0233, has more than 100 sites at around $32 a day.

KITING:

Lynn and Nantasket beaches, Larz Anderson Park in Brookline and Danehy Park in Cambridge are favorite kiting spots for their strong winds and spacious grounds. All the gear can be found at Kites of Boston, 7 North Market, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston, 742-1455. ✦

BRASSERIE JO OPENING

Photos By KERRY BRETT and ALLEN E. DINES

VIVE LA FRANCE! ON FRIDAY, MAY 1, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN MAGAZINE hosted the grand opening of the eagerly awaited Brasserie Jo, with world-renowned chef Jean Joho at the helm. The night drew an eclectic crowd of Boston's fashion, communications and entertainment set. More than 600 guests enjoyed a sampling of the French bistro-style cuisine, the brasserie's signature brew and regional wines that have made such a hit at the original eatery in Chicago. DJ Res One and the Greg Burk Quartet kept the room musically abuzz with jazz, soul and funk flavor.

Improper choices for weeks of May 20 - June 2

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday	Sunday	Monday	Tuesday
MAY 20	MAY 21	MAY 22	MAY 23	MAY 24	MAY 25	MAY 26

Jazzy
See classically trained Soviet émigré musician-cum-jazz enthusiast David Azarian play in his innovative piano stylings at Remis Auditorium at the Museum of Fine Arts tonight only at 7:30 pm. Tickets are $15 general admission and available by calling 369-3306.

David Azarian lives in Jazzland.

All Is Wells
Tonight is a perfect time to see the Beau Jest Moving Theater's adaptation of H.G. Wells classic novel, The War Of The Worlds, complete with their trademark blend of dance, music and physical comedy. At the Emerson Studio Theater, 69 Brimmer Street. Call Majestix (824-8000) for tickets.

Have A Ball
A soccer ball that is. Go see our New England Revolution make mincemeat out of the Columbus Crew at 7:30 pm at Foxboro Stadium.

Fear and Loathing
It's finally here! A movie version of infamous Hunter S. Thompson's book, Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas. Johnny Depp plays the drugged writer and Benicio Del Toro his wacky cohort Dr. Gonzo.

Fear and Loathing In Las Vegas.

Life's A Beach
Hit the beach on this lazy Sunday. Take the MBTA Commuter Rail from North Station and head to Singing Beach just past Manchester to get a nice tan and look at all the winter-pale bodies.

Shrimp On The Bar-bee
Or chicken. Or whatever the hell you want. Today is Memorial Day—the first official day of summer. Fire up the 'ol grill, buy a case of ice-cold beer, invite some buds by and party. I predict sun.

Fire And Ice
As in the most fun restaurant Cambridge has to offer. A '90s take on the similar Mongolian barbeque, Fire + Ice—at 50 Church Street—lets you, not some chef, create your own tasty eats with meats, veggies, sauces and rice included in the $13.75 fixed-price dinner.

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday	Sunday	Monday	Tuesday
MAY 27	MAY 28	MAY 29	MAY 30	MAY 31	JUNE 1	JUNE 2

Think About It
International jazz pianist and composer Pierre Hurel debuts his second CD, "What I'm Thinking About," at the Charles Hotel's Regattabar in Cambridge. Hear the Parisian tickle the ivory and learn, exactly, what he thinks about. 1 Bennett Street.

To All My Friends... A Drink!
Those are the words that adorn the side of Bukowski—a cozy little joint named after the drunken poet himself. Stop by and see why Uncle Charles would've kicked most of the patrons' asses...and while you're at it have a beer.

Black Is Back
Dubbed by some as the sexiest movie ever made, Black Orpheus—playing at the Harvard Film Archive at 9:30 pm—is the Camus version of the Greek Orpheus and Eurydice tale set in Rio's carnival. Don't miss this one.

Shear Madness
You know her as the buxom babe on the USA network who keeps you company during the wee hours of weekend mornings. So why don't you check out comedienne Rhonda Shear at the Comedy Connection in the flesh (pun intended). Call 248-9700 for more info. 245 Quincy Market Place.

A Very Big Race
Venture over to the Powder House Pub for the Powder House 4 miler where the only contestants in the "big" race have to be over 190 pounds. Watch them as they stop at checkpoints to eat hot dogs and down 8 ounce brews. For more info. call 354-3534.

Hitting The Links
Head outbound to the Belmont Country Club and be part of Vencor's "Make the Link" Golf Tournament to benefit the Alzheimer's Association. Golfers will compete for prizes like a year's lease on a brand, spanking new BMW. Call 494-5150 for more information.

Doctor, Doctor
Go see Moliére's last play, The Imaginary Invalid—a satire on the medical profession written, ironically, during the playwright's last days—at the American Repertory Theatre's Loeb Drama Center, 64 Brattle Street, Cambridge. For information call 547-8300.

The Imaginary Invalid by the American Repertory Theatre.

SOME FACTS ABOUT ACNE

- Chocolate does not cause acne.
- Suntanning does not clear up acne.
- Stress is an aggravator of acne.
- Cosmetics, even some synthetic oil-based and hypo-allergenic brands, will aggravate acne.

Let's Clear Up The Confusion

No one does what we do for ACNE
The fact is...we do it better than anyone else.

The stake-out ends at 11, and my stomach sounds like there's a loose lug nut rolling around in there.

Dee Dee is complaining how at this late hour it means a TV dinner again. Thanks for sharing that Dee Dee.

Then, she spots it. Legal C Bar & Grille. Open till 1, dinner till midnight. Caribbean specialities like Conch Fritters and Brazilian Red Snapper. It may be late, but the C Bar's jumping. Dee Dee looks at me and asks under her breath, "Are we still in Boston?"

"More than ever, kid. More than ever."

In the Statler Office Bldg
Open until 1 am. Dinner until midnight.

WORK AT LOTUS

A couple of years ago, you jumped on the Internet bandwagon, but somewhere along the line one of the wheels fell off. Time to find a wagon train with a sense of direction.

HERE'S A BIZARRE IDEA.

Why not be part of a company that's actually trying to make the Internet work for business? You know, fuel the economy, change the way people communicate, revolutionize the marketplace, and maybe have some much fun in between.

With Lotus, you'll be getting down to serious business with servers, technology like Lotus Domino™ and Lotus Domino.Web Server, and Internet Secure. Interactive web sites easier to build and manage.

Are you ready? Wagons, ho.

NEWPORT FILM

La Femme Nechita

Twelve-year-old Alexandra Nechita is the first known painter-prodigy in art history. At age two the Romanian-born began working in pen and ink. She quickly graduated to oils and acrylics. Nechita—sometimes known as the "pint-sized Picasso" and recently named as one of CBS's "Most Fascinating Women"—sold her first painting for $50. The pre-teen artist gets $75,000 to $100,000 nowadays. Her exhibit opens at the Dyansen Gallery (at 132a Newbury) on June 6 and runs through July 6.

★ Don't Bother
★★ Fair
★★★ Good
★★★★ Terrific

Chinese Box
Wayne Wang calls this movie a love-hate letter to his native Hong Kong. It's a stimulating collage of sights and sounds from the city's last months a British colony in 1997. At its core is an achingly moving story about a dying Western journalist with an insatiable desire to find out what makes Hong Kong tick, and an unrequited passion for a beautiful Chinese woman with a dishonorable past. Jeremy Irons gives a daredevil performance as the yearning writer; he arrives at an emotional rawness that feels lived in, not acted out. Gong Li gives three-dimensional womanliness to the object of Irons's desire. Maggie Cheung is great as the brash and resourceful street girl whom Irons sees as emblematic of Hong Kong's East-West hybrid. Ruben Blades boosts the spirits with comic relief.

Eamonn Owens and Stephen Rea in The Butcher Boy.

He Got Game
★★★1/2
Spike Lee charges back into the big leagues with his most emotionally true film yet. The pivotal relationship between a father (Denzel Washington) and son (Ray Allen) isn't drowned out by the broader-picture look at basketball recruitment. Both lead performances are outstanding. The hook is compelling: Washington is a prisoner who is promised an early parole if he can convince his estranged son, a high-school hoops phenomenon, to choose the state university. He returns to the Coney Island projects and tries to redeem himself in the eyes of his son and daughter. The son is pressured from all sides about his college choice, and temptations are dangled in front of him. There's a weak subplot involving Washington and prostitute Milla Jovovich (doing a decent Marisa Tomei impression). But the movie makes potent returns to the court, where man and boy thrash out their emotions with the help of a ball and a hoop.

Artemisia
Agnes Meriet's biopic about the early years of 17th century painter Artemisia Gentileschi depicts the resourcefulness of a talented and privileged girl who blazes a trail to self-expression. But Artemisia's determination to paint the human form complicated her progress: women were prohibited by Vatican law from observing nude models. The turning point in Artemisia's life was the trial in which her mentor was accused of raping her. Meriet show the relationship between the eager girl and the reckless but soulful older man to be the one of romantic passion (the scandal and the trial are the problematic parts of the film). Valentina Cervi is sensational in the lead role.

The Butcher Boy
There may not be a better movie released this year than this Irish tragicomedy directed by Neil Jordan. Newcomer Eamonn Owen is unforgettable as twelve-year-old Frankie, the troubled terror of his town. Stephen Rae gives two great performances. His narration as the adult Frankie is wry and dry, in counterpoint to the feverish action we see on screen. He also plays Frankie's abusive, alcoholic father whose dark madness may have been passed on to his son. Jordan orchestrates a variety of tones with utter confidence, and creates a bold form of Irish magical realism. The film is adapted from a novel by Patrick McCabe, who co-scriped with Jordan.

Deep Impact
This Speilberg production directed by Mimi Leder ("The Peacemaker") is an attempt at a human-grounded disaster movie that goes deeper than the kitsch of "Independence Day." But it takes itself so seriously that it's even worse than "ID." It's dull and sentimental with the feel of a TV miniseries. But they could have done a lot worse than Tea Leoni as the main character, a TV reporter who stumbles onto the news that a comet is heading right towards earth. Morgan Freeman plays the calm-under-fire US president who explains to the populace that some have been chosen to live in survival caves, the rest will likely perish. Meanwhile, a crew of astronauts goes on a mission to nuke the comet. Another subplot concerns teen Elijah Wood. The movie never fully grapples with how people would cope with the selection process. The special effects aren't as spiffy as one expects for this big a production. Strong supporting performances by Vanessa Redgrave as Leoni's mother and Robert Duvall as the big-hearted veteran space jockey.

Shooting Fish
This youth comedy involves the '60s with its splashy credits sequence, groovy music and breathless quality. But it couldn't be further from the liberating spirit of its predecessors of 30 years ago. Rather appallingly, it goes on a trajectory TOWARDS money, privilege and marriage. Dan Fattuerman and Stuart Townsend play an American and a Bit who each grew up in orphanages, and who partner up in London as conmen (of the "lovable" movie type). Futterman is the slick talker, Townsend the techno wiz. They live in a water tower which they've filled with gadgetry and retro icons (such as a shrine to Burt Bacharach). Into their lives comes a temp played by Kate Bekinsale, with problems and schemes of her own. There's the seed for another, much better movie in the relationship between sharpie Bekinsale and sweetly awkward Townsend. You wish he'd invent a way for them to jump off the screen and escape from Shooting Fish.

Stuart Townshend, Kate Beckinsale and Dan Futterman star in Stefan Schwartz' Shooting Fish.

Chocoholics Unite!

Heard the latest statistic regarding chocolate? According to scientists the rate of consumption has outpaced the rate of production! So before the cost of a Hershey's bar reaches that of Godiva, rush over to Mass. NARAL's 15th Annual Chocolate Madness Festival on Wednesday, May 20. The gorging begins at 7 p.m. at the Véronique Ballroom on 20 Chapel St. in Brookline (directly across from the Longwood T stop). For two hours you will be able to partake of an achingly sweet array of chocolate desserts from Boston's finest restaurants, including Grill 23, Olives, Metropolis Cafe and Salamander. Burn off the excess calories whilst celebrity-watching, bidding on silent auction items and boogying to the tunes of a cool jazz band. Admission is $30 per person and all proceeds go to benefit Mass NARAL's programs to protect and advance reproductive freedom. For tickets and information, call 556-8800.

Poor Connoisseur

Do you harbor champagne wishes and caviar dreams but live on a six-pack and bologna budget? Fear not, for Marc Kadish, owner of Allston's Sunset Grill & Tap, just opened the 6 Burner, a fabulously chi-chi café that is definitely a destination choice for the connoisseur on a budget. From the imaginative décor to the tony eats, the 6 Burner is fast developing a reputation by those in-the-know. Chefs Justin Kane and Gillian Askew prepare an exotic array of delectably gourmet dishes, none of which cost more than $9.95 (try the filet mignon with wild mushroom ragout-stuffed cannelloni on a pool of Chianti demi-glace). If you can't make it for dinner, then head over for a traditional weekend brunch, served every Saturday and Sunday 10:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m.

Climb to the Top

Next time your special someone offers you dinner and a movie as a night out on the town, gleefully agree—then drag them to the Museum of Science. On Wednesday, May 20 the newly refurbished Skyline Room on the museum's sixth floor will offer not only the splendid nouveau cuisine of Chef Lynda Boothroyd, but views of the Boston and Cambridge skylines from a dining room overlooking the Charles River. Following dinner, guests will be escorted to the Omni Theater for a screening of the new Imax movie Everest. Filmed by Newton-based filmmaker David Breashear, the movie's tickets alone are worth the $32 price of the evening. Dinner starts promptly at 5:30 and parking is free. Reservations are required (the dinner is limited to 100 guests) and may be gleaned by calling 723-2500.

Un Vin Merveilleux

Join the French Library & Cultural Center as they host Lorenzo Savona's informative discussion on French wines. Conducted in English, the May 28 event provides attendees the opportunity to sample some of the best wines France has to offer. Admission is $10 for members; $20 for non-members. Call 266-4351 for reservations.

Mamma Mia

Among Boston's better dining destinations, one invariably calls to mind the romance of the Old World—the North End's Mamma Maria. Located in an elegant turn-of-the-century North Square townhouse, Mamma Maria recently underwent an exhaustive renovation under the direction of owner John McGee. The results include an upstairs bar with twelve seats which features a Jacapo Poli grappa "library" and five dining rooms, each with their own distinct characteristics. A fast-favorite is the Piccolo—a private window offers diners unfettered views of Boston whilst accommodating either two for a romantic dinner or up to six for a private party or business meeting.

Dinner is served nightly beginning at 5 p.m. and reservations are recommended. To learn more about Mamma Maria, visit their web site at www.mammamaria.com. Highly informative, the site features recipes, wine insights and a calendar of upcoming events.

Sounds n' Sights

The venerable Bay Tower ushers in their twentieth season of fine dining with the incomparable sounds of lounge-jazz singer Darin Ames. Ames has been likened in the past to a Tony Bennett-meets-Harry Connick, Jr. crooner whose repertoire features everything from ballads to upbeat swingster medleys. Catch him in the Bay Tower's 33rd floor cocktail lounge whilst enjoying breathtaking views of Boston Harbor through 24 ft. picture-windows. And the food? Chef Daniel Kahn's eclectic presentation of New England favorites is not easily forgotten.

Improper IMPERSONALS

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. That's why we have the Improper Impersonals, a column written by you, the reader. Send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And it's free! Pick up a pen and tell that babe on the T you like his butt by writing to Improper Impersonals, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, 75 Arlington Street, 9th Floor Boston, MA 02116, fax: (617) 859-1446 or e-mail us at editor@improper.com. Recent correspondence follows.

Harvard Square Pedestrienne
If I didn't encounter you so often, I might think more than twice about voicing my desire to the wind... You and I cross paths at least weekly in Harvard Square: What I've seen of your morning trajectory begins at Mass. Ave. near the Harvard Book Store, down JFK Street, ending past the School of Government. (Or perhaps inside?) You, a striking exception to the bland Cantabrigian rule, have a short haircut with highlights, are always tastefully dressed, but most intriguing of all, your gaze is always pointed downward. Your demeanor doesn't strike me as introverted—what is it that distracts you so? If etiquette allowed, I'd introduce myself, a tall, blond, thoughtful gentleman, but it seems somehow improper (of all things) to dare disturb your reverie. Where are you, mademoiselle? Share with me and the world your eyes.
HOMME A PIEO

Jeff
To the best-looking employee at Curious Liquids. I make it a point to come in every day you are working. I turn into a total wordless loser every time you are within five feet. I just can't get myself to say anything to you because I don't want to make an ass out of myself. You more than likely have someone because you are a stallion, but if I ever got over my shyness I think we would be perfect for one another. If you're "curious" about me, contact me here. Or else maybe I'll stop being a freak and actually talk to you. See you tomorrow for my coffee.

Happy birthday, my darling husband! Have a wonderful day and a year of good surprises and many blessings. I love you. PK!
Love, your sweet wife,
JONES
P.S. Happy birthday from the new girl, and Phoebe and Sprocket, too. (Girls all around you!)

Little Miss San Francisco
I haven't spoken to you in weeks. It seems like a lifetime ago since you've been in my life. I've missed you dearly ... your smile, the way you walked across a room ... as you walked out of my life. And all I have to say is THANK YOU. Thank you for making me realize you weren't the one. Thank you for showing me all the selfishness and self-centeredness I was too blinded by love to see. Thank you for my apartment not smelling like cigarette butts anymore. Thank you for not taking up my time as you refused to get off the couch. Thank you for getting all those ugly beads out of my house. Thank you for saving me from an absolutely lousy "rest of my life." Thank you for being you. Beat it. Have a good life. Have an Altoid.

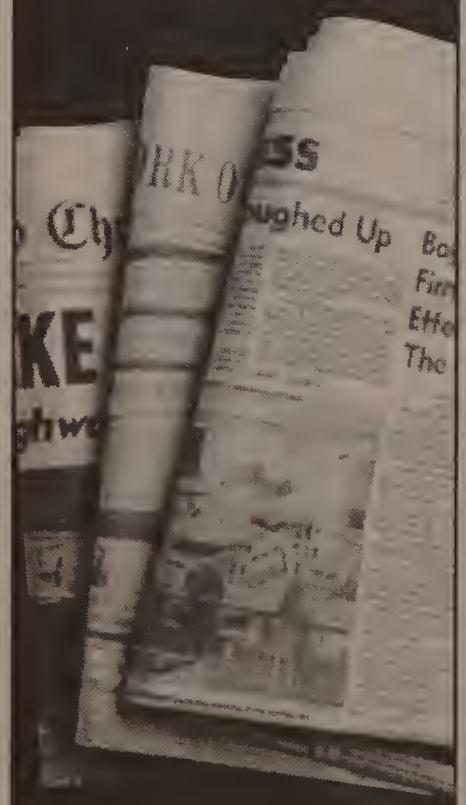
I appreciate your desire to talk no more of a certain umbrageous friendship. But someone wrote SS about "the dewdrops fallen to the ground." I assumed it was you. If I am in error then please let me know. Your answer will help me determine if I am still sane! Bewildered...
MELISSANOE



Waiting for You
Who never returned after the first dance—that Ode to Joy. I don't even know what your stock options are or if you dig Rilke! You said that if I gave you my number then you would give me a call later. And just because I didn't leave a number am I then to be abandoned? coffee@someday-cafe.somerville?

Three years? Four years? What's the difference! Thank you for the nonstop fun and laughs—for someone who is always on the go, you always seem to be there for me! You are so damn mystical!

My Darling J
My best buddy, dancing and bed partner can't quite figure out why I adore you so much, yet there is no bonking. Perhaps that will change this summer or with a move to sunnier climes...

To: Please Call Me I Think I'm in Love and Vitriol for All
Stop it—you two are killing me—are you writers for THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN? Let's get together, wearing all black, and walk up and down Newbury Street acting fake, pretentious and angst-ridden. We'll throw in a couple of stops at watering holes where we can fashion our own version of the Algonquin Round Table (sorry, I'm not playing the Dorothy Parker role). Others may sit at the table, but anyone who uses the word "empower," the phrase "mission statement" or comes to the table wearing Tommy Hilfiger is outta there. Then it's on to the MFA where we can discuss Kandinsky vs. Lewinsky. Please answer...
VIAGRA FOR ALL (DAMN, I WISH I BOUGHT THE STOCK)

Dear Viagra for All:
Yes. Yes indeed, one works for THE IMPROPER as a writer and more. You're Sherlock Holmes! You're Barretta! You're F-'in Magnum P.I.! I have a better idea of what we can do...we can enlighten your sorry mistaken ass to the fact that not all writers wear black, talk brooding angst and walk down Newbury Street. You are so very disillusioned. But every cloud has a silver lining, and although your message was insulting, it was also refreshing to see someone actually pick up on this literary jousting. I felt the need to defend the column—written by you guys and for you guys—against someone just writing to trash it. I mean it's a cool concept—this way of communicating to people we might have just walked by and admired but who may have never even noticed—isn't it? So I throw down the gauntlet. Has anybody ever written an Impersonal and met a friend, loved one, other, etc. whom they would not otherwise have known? Get in touch...

Curious Liquids is a paragon of coffeehouses.
- Boston Phoenix

Care for a cup of coffee in an ancient wine cellar? Curious Liquids is the perfect spot.
- The Suffolk Journal

Here is a tea room / coffee house for the nineties. What a great spot to relax.
- Sidewalk.com

Good people of the world, WHERE magazine needs to enlist you in a very noble cause. We're asking you to put down that coffee you bought from that corporate-chain coffee house and immerse yourself in some liquid wonder...
- Where magazine

The combination of comfy, tattered velvet couches and a wide variety of books and board games creates the feeling of a swanky family room in the basement.
- The Daily Free Press

Drinkable and soft, cafe has it. The decor is equally interesting – vintage furniture upstairs, red and platinum rooms downstairs...

431 Columbus Ave. (in the South End), 536-5723 and 355 Hanover St. (in the North End), 523-9026. Voted Boston's Best Seafood Restaurant and Boston's second best Italian restaurant in Zagat's Restaurant Guide, Giacomos now has two convenient locations. Giacomos of the North End is now in the South End, too. They have the freshest seafood and pasta you've ever tasted and, of course, the top quality, friendly service that is Giacomos trademark. Both North End and South End locations are open 7 days a week (dinner only). The South End location accepts all major credit cards.

Hibernia

25 Kingston St. There's nothing else like this. Come experience Boston's hottest new restaurant and nightclub, featuring eclectic, international cuisine by executive chef Chris Bussell, served in a colorful, modern environment designed by Irish artists Ger Sweeney and Mick Spense. Try our lobster pot stickers in hot and sour broth, or grilled salmon with spring pea risotto and sample wines from our extensive wine list featuring more than 14 wines by the glass.

House of Blues

96 Winthrop St., (Harvard Sq.), Cambridge, 491-BLUE. As our guest you will be surrounded by the sights, sounds and aromas of the Delta region in an intimate atmosphere. Our critically acclaimed menu features the finest American & Southern cuisine. The Original House of Blues is open seven days a week for lunch and dinner as well as three seatings for our now famous southern style buffet and show known as Gospel Brunch.

Joshua Tree

256 Elm Street, Davis Sq., Somerville. Join us in April to open Davis Square's newest hot spot where you can enjoy an upbeat atmosphere and a vast array of delectable dishes. Serving both lunch and dinner 7 days a week. Here you can sample over 30 microbrews in a comfortable setting. Featuring live entertainment every Thurs. - Sun.

KC's Peppercorn Grill

Rockie HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

MAY 20 - JUNE 2, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

A question about your future in music, pharmaceuticals or film might pop up on Friday as the numbers, the data you've been given fluctuate. All may be resolved to everyone's mutual satisfaction while the sun and Neptune in your career midheaven trine over the holiday weekend. This is almost as good as what happens on Tuesday, when your Mars ruler and Neptune also favorably align. But if these encouraging words don't propel you into purposeful action, perhaps the Gemini new moon in your money house will act as the instigator.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Much chatter about a surprising turn of events, either on the job or within the family circle. If you're not traveling this holiday, then make sure there are enough diversions to keep you interested; otherwise, you'll get antsy and drive yourself to distraction. However, daydreams can turn into memorable flights of fancy. You might not become emotional until next Thursday when your Venus ruler is thwarted by serious-minded Saturn. Will you abandon hope or turn the ideal into the real; either way, a hardship.

GEMINI

MAY 21 JUNE 20

An attempt to attach yourself to other people's resources can be tougher than you thought. Meet the challenge and you may capture this person's fancy and financial support. Money for artistic projects or charitable events is readily available, what with Mars in your sign adding chutzpah to your other qualifications. Set your goals on Monday after the Gemini new moon, and garner your forces (arguments, data) so you can successfully meet resistance from your partner.

CANCER

JUNE 21 JULY 22

Make it a memorable holiday by kicking off your season in the sun in style. While the sun and Neptune are in a rewarding trine, concerts and water sports give greater pleasure than usual. Get your fill because nothing much happens to you personally (although dear ones could become strangely entangled) until the new moon on Memorial Day provides the impetus to proceed. Group projects, perhaps more involvement in a political or social issue, take off once your objectives are lined up, like ducks, in a row.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Weirdness, hovering like a question mark over an assignment, can disappear when nebulous Neptune is trined by your sun ruler this weekend. Expect some kind of clarification, perhaps about an iffy health issue as well. After Memorial Day, the Gemini new moon inaugurates another phase of your career, one that involves communication skills and good grammar. Difficulties at home, about a family matter need to be exposed and not swept under the rug. Talk it over in depth, do the research.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Your usual brilliance can be truly exceptional when your Mercury ruler gets zapped by Uranus this weekend. Nothing you do will surprise the team, the kid or your current love interest; also, the more electrifying or electronic the act, the better. However, don't expect smooth traveling this weekend; wait until after the Gemini new moon kicks in. Then places to go and people to see can take precedence over anything else that might be on your agenda.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Amazing how money, even a casual helping hand, can fix a situation at home. It could be something fairly trivial, like repairing the CD player, or serious, like dealing with an addiction. As long as nebulous Neptune is injecting your domestic scene with alternating attitudes—hopeful one week, disappointment the next—you'll be on this sometimes gentle, sometimes scary roller coast ride. However, it's your Venus ruler's annual meeting with restrictive Saturn next Thursday that can really bring you down. Chin up.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Where there's smoke, there's probably a smoke machine, not necessarily fire. Illusion and the fun you'll have creating it, even appreciating it can be the leitmotif of your holiday weekend. Remember that Jupiter in your house of entertainment, romance and risk is expanding your confidence and rewarding you for taking chances. So, if you're perplexed because you're being encouraged by one partner and denied by another, e.g., your mate, go for what you feel has lasting value.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

It happens every Gemini. The Centaur becomes more interested in, maybe even dependent on, another being. So take what happens this week with a grain of salt, knowing that while you're not exactly vulnerable, you're more receptive to idealism, fantasies and lush musical backgrounds. The new moon could trigger a new assignment or interest in healing; still, you're likely to be in conflict midweek when the sun opposes obsessional Pluto in your sign. Give it up.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

The tenor of the weekend ranges from sudden attacks on your reasoning, driving skills and electronic equipment to idealistic musings about your artistic talent, spiritual gifts and fertile imagination. If you figure that you're damned if you do and damned if you don't, and truly don't give a damn, then by the time loving Venus joins your Saturn ruler for their annual kissfest next Thursday, everything should be resolved. Feelings about family roots are intense, domestic bliss can be truly blissful.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

No matter where you wind up this holiday weekend, you'll be doing a lot of talking to the family, maybe to a real estate agent, too. Mercury contacts your Uranus ruler on Friday and starts a conversation (with many interruptions and questions) that doesn't let up until after the Gemini new moon on Monday. That's the time to set things that you've just learned about in motion. It's also a good time to rewire the lamp, buy telecommunication equipment, renew your subscription to House & Garden.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Gemini always adds a bit of excitement, for some Fish it's called tension, to your day-by-day excursions, so try to be more careful, less speedy on the road. This way you'll be around to enjoy the blessings that abound when the sun favors your Neptune ruler this weekend. Conformation of your innate spirituality and artistic sensibility comes from friends, associations and peer groups. By the middle of the week, there could be an incentive for getting further involved with them. Maybe an award, maybe a project in the offing.

BEATS A GOLD POCKET WATCH

It was one hell of a retirement party.

To acknowledge the 12 years in which Bruce Marks turned the Boston Ballet from a sow's ear into a silk purse, a tribute dinner was held at the Park Plaza, where 800 guests ate a sumptuous dinner, raised their glasses countless times, watched some beautiful dancing and expressed their undying admiration for Marks, who was surrounded by his three sons and had Peter Mehegan and Mary Richardson there to tape the whole thing for Channel 5.

Among the throng were social icon and Jackie-O bridesmaid Helen Spaulding, investment counselor and adventuress Enid Beal, the viceroys of Provincetown, Richard DiFrummolo and Donald Winter, Esq., the ever-gracious Florence Gerstein, distinguished Danish brain surgeon Thorkild Vad Norregaard, the Sigourney Weaver-esque Barbara Jordan and the terror of Chestnut Hill's tennis courts, Kathy Taylor, to name a few.

Several speeches, proclamations, presentations and standing ovations later, everyone bid Marks a reluctant farewell. Let's just hope someone remembered to hang his tights from the rafters at the Wang Center.

BIG SHOES TO FILL

Further proof that size does matter: the sight of Fidelity's Rick Tyson, holding Shaquille O'Neal's sneaker, which was up for grabs at the Make-A-Wish-Foundation's Fantasy Auction. Bidding on items like dinner with Ben Affleck and seats at a Chanel fashion show in Paris were such heavy-hitters as bachelor-about-town Bruce Percelay, Channel 5 video vixen Liz Brunner, celebrity chef Todd English and the lovely Olivia, interor designer and supermarket heiress Fotene Demoulas and one guest who said, "Now explain to me why I would want a previously owned sneaker that would only fit a giant."

LIKE LSD IN BLACK TIE

The closest I've come to watching a Fellini film or tripping on acid recently was the Institute of Contemporary Art's Spring Benefit.

A giant cube hung with gauze was built inside the Cyclorama, and a punk band in underwear fronted by a Dr. Jekyll-ish drag queen, who screamed out "Light My Fire" while a pair of go-go boys in blue body paint and angel's wings twirled ribbons on sticks.

And that was just before dinner.

Witnesses to this spectacle included Brahmin techie Andrew Cabot and his wife Maud, his cousin, Carla, whose husband, Carlton, was off playing golf in Scotland, arts patron and mutual fund heiress Beth Johnson, Seth "I never go to parties" Greenberg, saucy restaurateur Fiona Hamersley, balding high-tech playboy Dave Tulis (Boston-bred but Colorado-based), art collecting stockbroker Sheryl Marshall and various good-looking, impeccably groomed and expensively dressed others.

Following dinner and the obligatory auction, the dancing began, with a human disco ball getting things going and such late arrivals as record minx Lisa Mastrianni, red-headed Circe Rebecca Garrison, eternal club creature Eric B. and flamenco-dancing heartthrob Bernardo Hernandez adding to the mix.

Before anyone could get bored, the booze ran out and the bars shut down, which is just as well. The worst thing about a Fellini film or an acid trip is when it lasts longer than it should.

ARS LONGA, WEEKEND BREVIS

Anyone who says that Boston isn't a center of culture and the arts slept late a few Sundays ago.

Over at Symphony Hall, several of the greatest classical musicians alive gathered for a tribute concert for retiring impresario Walter Pierce. On stage were gargantuan talents like flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal, violinist Isaac Stern, cellist Yo-Yo Ma and pianist Emanuel Ax, but even the audience had a few headliners, like opera diva Leontyne Price and her brother, George, who's a brigadier general, trophy ex-wife Joan Kennedy, squired by fashion designer Alfred Fiandaca, and head honcha Ann Hawley of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. Meanwhile, over at the Museum of Fine Arts, the David Hockney exhibit opened and, in addition to the painter himself, attracted such noteworthy locals as eminence grise John Kenneth Galbraith and his wife, Kitty.

As if that wasn't enough proof that Boston is highly civilized, both events were over early enough to get home, order Chinese food, watch TV, and still be in bed by eleven.

GUESS ALL THOSE DANCING LESSONS PAID OFF

Jewels came out of the vault, ballgowns came out of mothballs and Peter Duchin flew up from New York with his orchestra. The only thing that could have made the Friends of the Public Garden's Green and White Ball more piss-elegant was a tiara or two, or maybe Audrey Hepburn.

The guestlist included varsity partiers Joan and Ted Benard-Cutler and heirs apparent Randi and Joel, gallery owner Andrea Marquit Clagett, Back Bay socialites Suzanne and Bob LeVine and Karen and Manny Golov, design avatars Chris Drake and Lee Bierly, and various other people with big piles of money and beautiful homes in Back Bay or Beacon Hill.

Following cocktails on the Ritz Roof, there was dinner and dancing in the ballroom, which provided something for everyone. "This is perfect," said one attendee. "I'm starving, and my wife won't stop dancing, so I get to eat her dinner, too." ✦

Summer Good, Summer Bad

Thanks again for the summer guide ("Boston in Heat," May 20). This issue is probably the most important one to me all year because I can actually keep it through the summer and refer back again and again. Alexandra Hall seemed to cover all the usual bases in an extremely thorough manner, and the side article on the surf scene—however tiny it is—was an excellent addition. The only thing that irked me a little was the fact that the picture next to the New England Revolution schedule had Alexi Lalas in it. Lalas was traded to the MetroStars of New York/New Jersey in the off-season and is no longer a Revolutionary.

Jim Malle
Brookline

Your "Boston in Heat" article was great, but it resembles last year's version quite a bit...not that there's anything wrong with that. I just was hoping for a change of pace in the usual scene during the Bostonian summer. I also want to note that the color photography and the great layout add significantly to the depth of the articles—making each article more enjoyable to read.

Demi Samms
Somerville

OK, OK, enough already. Sure, the summer guide THE IMPROPER puts out every year is informative and—I guess—a bit entertaining. But it's the same thing every year. The Red Sox schedule. A list of all the beaches. What is going on at the BSO. It's always the same. I have a suggestion...change it up next year. That's right, maybe specific individual stories on fun places to go or things to do that not everybody in town knows about. It even seems like somebody took last year's summer guide, switched the dates so they are updated, changed the layout around and ran it per usual. I don't know. I love your magazine, but, like I said, every year it's basically the same thing.

Loose Lips

Just wanted to let you guys know that the little tidbit in "Loosely Speaking" (May 20) about the lesbian tryst in the bathroom at Mistral was extremely hilarious. I guess patrons at über-trendy restaurants can get away with almost anything they want, which is fine by me...their moans could be considered "mood music."

Montegue S. Mathis

The Wrong Stuff

Please say the New Kids on the Block party ("City Haul," May 20) is a joke...because the band itself was a complete joke funnier than even the funniest comedian around. Why—after 10 years—would people want to celebrate the sub-mediocrity of this pathetic group of neverbeens. Sure, they made some money. The albums sold well, too. But after all this time has gone by, can't we just forget them? Salvatore Tuzzeo should be punched for just thinking about them—even if it was just to laugh.

Jill Bell

Not Just a Jog

Jenny Jordan's feature on ultrarunning ("Ultra Insane," May 20) was a unique addition to the usual pieces you guys run. I've been a runner for years but never considered a 30-hour, 100-mile marathon. Now that I am aware of such an event, I just might try it out...with much training, blood, sweat and tears, of course. I can only imagine the painful (but gratifying) finish of such a run. Hopefully, with some time and determination I can stop imagining and feel, firsthand, how an "ultrarun" really feels.

Teening with Talent

Artists for Humanity is a program where teens work as paid artists, photographers and designers of products. 288-300 A Street, Boston; 737-2455

YOU'VE HEARD OF ART: IT'S THAT THING YOU CAN'T afford a studio to work on in, and, anyway, you can't make money from it. And you've heard of teenagers: those slouchers and dreamers. Artists for Humanity, an inner-city, after-school program located in some truly gorgeous space (35,000 square feet of loft spaee overlooking the ever-changing Expressway), is designed as an aetual paying job for kids doing art. Hand-in-gratifying-hand with an enhancemcnt of the image of "urban youth," AFH also combines Business with Art. The kids actually have corporatc clients—big and exciting ones like the Red Sox, Gillette and MIT—that hire them to design T-shirts and eaps. Smaller businesses use their moody urban black-and-white photos for company calendars. These kids have worked on anti-smoking projects, directly addressing their own vulnerable peer group. Silk-screening, photography and airbrushing, and the equipment thereof, is part of the deal, as is learning to do a business plan. Thesc young "artrepreneurs" also get to cxhibit their work at the offices of corporations. Their studios show works-in-progress that are full of yearning, expressions of raeial pride and just plain talent. Rather more fun than working at McDonald's. ✦

Broken Polish

Exile, jazz and love that is requited just enough to keepthe musician hero tormented. The Polish Lover is by Gloucester's Anthony Waller ($22.95)

Waller's novel The Polish Lover is a musician's take on the post-Soviet era, love, life and music.

THE POLISH LOVER IS A NOVEL WRITTEN BY A PROFESSIONAL musician. And it shows in the way the story plays and plays, going off into dissonant byways whilc never losing its hypnotic strand of what is often pleasurable agony. Danny is a jazz clarinetist, and his perversely clusivc quarry, pursued, loved and repeatedly not-quite-caught, is Maja, dangerous and seductive. This is a post-Soviet Poland, jostling with rudc, eccentric energy. The life there of Anthony Waller's semi-included exile Danny is a hot, vodka-soaked, long-running party. While the cold weather rages without, the indoors is made the more intimate and ehaotic by the eontinuing privations in the world around them. If Maja is tantalizing, Danny's unresolved European wanderings, his eareer and the music he plays echo that richness and torment. Waller, himself a musician, says, "There's a fair number of novels about the jazz life, but almost nonc written by someone who plays an instrument." His musings on music are indeed gorgeous. They eome as a balm for the rejections and evasions delivered by Maja: "We tore into it, and the generous angel that occasionally watches over jazz musicians was with me. I was in that ideal state of knowing the tune inside out without having played it for several months, so there was a coastal shelf of ideas waiting to be dredged up. We took it out violently, the piano doubling me on the melody, and ended altogether with an almighty erash.". ✦

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

Mopsy

Storyteller Sharon Kennedy collecting Irish stories.

The Wizard of Cork

Storyteller Sharon Kennedy tells of spritely mystical doings in Irish Folk Tales for Children from Rounder Records ($16.99 CD, $9.99 tape)

IN HER LILTINGLY IRISH VOICE, SHARON KENNEDY (who happens to live in Medford) tells a series of Irish tales for children that are every bit as full of transformations and morphings as any modern story writ in video. And they're lively, managing to slip culture, history and the extraordinary gossamer magic of Ireland into ornate stories kids will want to hear again and again. Talking horses, leprechauns and gold coins appear and disappear. Wily wizards turn poverty-stricken girls into stones (but their clever, more strategic sister, using a magic wand, turns them back into girls again). The Irish eome across as resigned, at times almost cheerfully, to the inevitability of poverty. But it's a poverty that is eounterbalanced by merriment, trickery and sometimes a supernatural erisserossing of humans and other species. One girl whose father is a seal fisherman becomes a seal herself in order to atone for the wrongs he has done to those ereatures. Money got is as soon money lost, but deep and ancient wrongs are satisfyingly righted, too. One story has a repeated line, "Me tig and me tag and me long leather bag," reeited to the beating of a drum, and it's just the sort of rhythmic stirring that grabs the attention of the young. ✦

Loosely Speaking

Warren Beatty

PILING UP THE BUL

The already-said-to-be-seminal Bulworth got rave reviews from a blue-ribbon panel of local ersatz critics two months before it opened. Producer/director/ star Warren Beatty invited Harvard's black luminaries-in-residence Skip Gates and Cornel West, along with famed writers Doris Kearns Goodwin and husband, former Kennedy speechwriter Dick Goodwin, of Concord, plus Norman Mailer (who, in the past, has penned lionizing pieces on Beatty) to a preview screening at Copley Place, followed by dinner and post-mortems at the Four Seasons. "Everybody loved the movie," said Kearns Goodwin. Indeed, Gates later wrote a loving piece on it, titled "The White Negro," for the New Yorker. "We thought it was very courageous of Warren; we were buoyed by its hard-hitting message. The whole system's corrupt and that's what you see in the movie." She said the group especially liked the satirical speeches Beatty's rapmeister/US senator-character makes, "sounding just like everybody these days, 'embarking on the new millenium.' We roared." The Goodwins have been friends with Beatty since the Bobby Kennedy presidential campaign, on which Beatty worked, and renewed the friendship when they lived in LA a few years ago when Dick Goodwin produced the film Quiz Show. And yes, the former Hollywood bad boy/glamour puss is "really really smart and one terrific guy," said Kearns Goodwin. "And now he seems so settled, so grounded and happy, with a solid wife and kids, that he can really put himself into doing a project like this. It's too much to ask that a movie can mobilize the country," she said, "but we can hope."

Henry Louis "Skip" Gates Jr.

GEE, THEY COULD HAVE JUST CALLED IT JONATHAN SOROFF: AT WORK AND AT PLAY

First, the reference was to 19th-century Beacon Hill author/doctor/genius/eccentric Oliver Wendell Holmes, then a bar on the Cape, now, of course, our venerable publication. But if one relies on a book released this week by Beacon Press, "Improper Bostonians" are "sodomists... fops...dandies... lavenders... subway Sammies," or, in modern parlance, lesbians and gays. A history of prominent purported homosexuals in Boston, the book includes a bevy of interesting citations: Ralph Waldo Emerson, Leverett Saltonstall, John Singer Sargent, Amy Lowell, Winslow Homer, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Herman Melville, Margaret Fuller, Walt Whitman, Kahlil Gibran, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Henry David Thoreau and, oh, yes, Sylvia Sidney.

TENDER IS THE NIGHTLIFE

Illustrating perhaps yet again that biochemistry is destiny, F. Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald great-granddaughter Blake Hazard, a Harvard senior, lends her vocals to Transamber, the CD out this week by Star Hustler, the band led by Jason Hatfield, son of Globe writer Julie, brother of Juliana.

Blake Hazard

AS WE SAID...

Total Skin Care, the Commonwealth Avenue day spa lauded in Caeri Bertrand's tattoo and hair removal article (THE IMPROPER, May 6), is singled out in the latest issue of Mirabella as one of only three places in the country recommended for laser hair-removal treatment.

JUST CALL HIM RINGMASTER JAKE

Boston scenester "Puppermaster Jake" ran off with the Big Apple Circus when the Big Top left Boston last month. Jake, a.k.a. Jacob Schachter, 31, developed quite a following as an MC and headliner at venues from the Middle East in Cambridge to Jacques in the South End and MTV. His repertoire included a satirical updating of The Story of O and bizarre portrayals of dating on the alterna-scene. Raised in Maine without a TV or a toilet, Jake later supported his art with a corporate job at Sony Locws cinemas. Now he travels in a trailer village with 150 circusters and three elephants.

Puppetmaster Jake

READY, SET: JET

The trendy Manhattan-based Jet Lounge club chain, previously reported to be eyeing a move here into the empty Guild Drug at Exeter and Boylston, now say they'll be going into 911 Boylston, current site of Dad's Beantown Diner, but not until the fall. Last summer, Jet, which was said to be financed by Boston restaurateur Joe Cimino, who owns Dad's, opened Jet East in Southampton to compete with Seth Greenberg's Long Island outpost of M-80.

QUAYLE IS SERVED

Meanwhile, aforesaid Joe Cimino played host last weekend to former Vice President (and current GOP Presidential hopeful) Dan Quayle, in town for a commencement address at Suffolk. Quayle and daughter Corrine opted to lunch al fresco at Cimino's Ciao Bella on that sunny Saturday, evidently at the same time as half of Newbury Street. When Cimino let his maitre d' know the former veep was coming, he was told they had no tables available—and wouldn't.

Joe Cimino and Dan Quayle

"Well, for god's sake, borrow one from next door," Cimino boomed. Which they did.

YOU GO, GIRL

Pattie Maes, MIT Media Lab wunderkind, Firefly founder, People 50 Most Beautiful person and two-time IMPROPER cover gal, just achieved the one status symbol that no doubt means the most: tenure. Maes was one of 23 at MIT elevated this week as professors with a lifetime job.

A PICTURE WASN'T WORTH A FEW THOUSAND

Herald folks were chortling at what they envisioned as one of the great gaffes of publishing history, the Globe's printing "a million copies" of its May 20 "Globe 100" business supplement sans any type on the front page. "Imagine the cost of redoing that—in 4-color!" said one rival. Well, not exactly. The production snafu occurred, but was caught after a few thousand copies. "But we did have to stop the presses," said Globe business editor Larry Edelman. "It was a pain in the ass. But as [managing editor] Tom Mulvoy said, not exactly as momentous as the last time he had to that—Bobby Kennedy's assassination."

UPBEAT DOWNTOWN

Bluesheads, who normally have to trek to the South End or Cambridge for their musical fixes, should be jazzed up by the opening this month of the Black Rhino at the site of the old 21 Broad restaurant in the financial district. Owner John Cronin, who also co-owns Boston Beer Garden in Southie, promises a line-up that includes Jose Ramos of Wally's Café fame to lead an open jam on Thursdays plus Jeannie and the Golightlies as regulars.

Don't Quit the Day Job

Jonathan Baird—former Harvard Lampoon alum and award-winning designer—has written a book. Titled Day Job: A Workplace Reader for the Restless Age, it looks overwhelming at first. The design (seemingly notebook pages on top of actual book pages) and the topic make the gist of Baird's tome hard to distinguish at a quick glance. It takes more than one perusal through the pages to get to the point of Baird's work and finally say out loud, "Cool!" Baird's is the story of the young professional and the restlessness of youth in a corporate world where conventional success sometimes fails to bring happiness and contentment. I'm sure we all relate to that. Speaking of convention, the publishers of Day Job are distributing the book not in the major Books "R" Us manner, but in college, local and independent bookstores and over the Web at www.dayjob.com.

Shop Till You Drop

Think shopping on Newbury Street is expensive? Think again. The DaVinci Designer Gallery in Winthrop is presenting "A Tale of Two Cities" European Art and Antiques Buying Tour, which features nine days of shopping in London and Paris. The trip will offer tour guests four-star accommodations, "sumptuous meals" and a professional courier to transport priceless treasures back to the States. The tours—there are actually two of them—cost $4,595 and depart on October 7 and May 12. Just make sure you bring a good credit line.

FLAVOR OF THE MONTH

It's wicked hot out there. At 29 Newbury, famed bartendress Scott Cardwell concocted the perfect antidote—the Black Orchid. A sassy summertime sip if there ever was one, the creation is as tasty as its alluring color suggests. The beguiling cocktail's ingredients pack a punch and are a perfect accompaniment to a night out on the town. Ladies may choose to garnish their martini glass with Wet 'n' Wild's Black Orchid lipstick—at a buck a tube, it's far cheaper than the drink!

Hello, Jonny!

Pianist Jon Jarvis—of The Jon Jarvis Trio, with Anthony Weller on guitar and Bob Nieske on bass—is celebrating. After bouncing around the Boston and New York scene for the last 30 years, Jarvis has finally cut his second recording with the new trio, titled Never, Never Land. Jarvis' name recognition among jazz aficionados has remained limited over the years, but with the new album and a special guest appearance by the late, legendary violinist Stephane Grappelli, his jazz star seems to be rising. The trio holds court at the Regattabar on June 9 (sets at 8:30 and 10 pm)...you might not want to miss this performance.

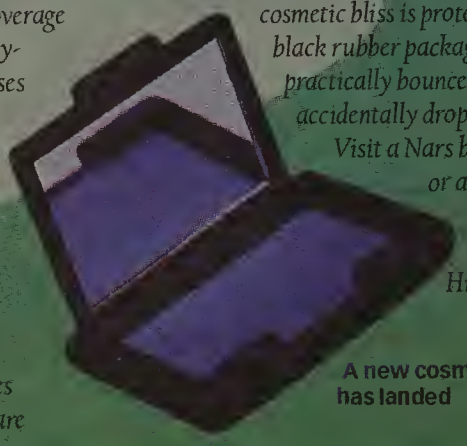
Beauty & TRUTH

Nars Attacks

Makeup artist François Nars has whipped up more new looks than Tracey Ullman. Now this Picasso of the powder puff has meticulously designed a complete line of cosmetics that makes famous folks like Madonna and Isabella Rossellini say olé. But is it good enough for my tough testers? A year and a half of experiments says: Nars to meet you, François.



Nars Oil Free and Moisture Balanced Foundations wear like a second skin—not too dewy and not too matte. You get an invisible layer that magically evens out skin tones, whether you slather it on with your fingertips for intense coverage or use a dampened sponge for a barely-there layer. We rate these $37 face bases numero uno!

Give those brown lipsticks with gray undertones the kiss-off. They make your lips look old and anemic—and so 1992. Nars lip shades bring an up-to-date vibrancy to your pretty pouter, adding color instead of draining it away. Sheers, semi-mattes and classic satin finishes that go on smooth and stay in place are available for 19 bucks a tube.

Monsieur N's pencils stay where you put them and sharpen like a dream. His nail polishes go on in thin coats, to keep chipping and peeling as well as drying time to a minimum. The colors are as hip and elegant as suave Tony Millionaire. Nars eye shadows and blushes are ideal for subtle contouring and discreet reshaping. But they are so heavily pigmented that I recommend them only for Hard-core Hatties who really know how to use their makeup.

Wrapped around all this cosmetic bliss is protective, hard black rubber packaging that practically bounces if you accidentally drop a compact. Visit a Nars bar at Saks or at Barneys at the Chestnut Hill mall.

A new cosmetic line has landed

Sinfully Sexy Skin

Give your hot flesh the pampering it craves

Ah, summer—when we strip out of long sleeves into shorts and tank tops, exposing flesh that very likely needs major attention. Here's a quick summer guide for your hide.

Assassinate ingrown hairs or those pesky pimplelike bumps that lurk on your upper arms and thighs by using a dry, hard-bristled brush before you shower. Brush with brisk, circular motions to loosen the dead skin that clogs those pores. Keep up the scrubbing sessions for a few days and watch how it bumps off those bumps. Mean, natural-bristle brushes that are as stiff as a toilet scrubber or a hand brush are the best. This is the cheapest and most effective way to exfoliate the whole bod, too.

Stuck in the city when everyone else is on vacation? Turn your modest bathroom into a spa. Dead Sea Products makes an amazing at-home body mud that you slather on from head to toe—excluding private parts. Then stand in front of the TV with your channel changer for about 30 minutes, till the mud is dry. Rinse, and—whammo!—smooth, glowing, detoxified skin is yours. At 10 bucks a pop it sure is cheaper than those swanky resorts. Find Dead Sea's Mineral Care Dead Sea Mud at Harnett's or Huron Drug in Cambridge. Or check out Beautyway, a must-visit beauty-supply shop with locations at 83 Beacon Street in Newton Center and in Natick.

Now let's slather on a body moisturizer that won't leave us sticky and hot. My testing songbirds and I found a nestful of lotions that left our skin supple and smooth as the day we were hatched. Estée Lauder's Resilience Body is our fave for eliminating ashy, dry skin; we also love Zia's brand-new Ultimate Body Moisture. Those who need to hydrate while hiding from the sun should pick a bunch of Banana Boat's Oil-Free Sunblock Lotion SPF 15 or Jergen's Original—either leaves skin touchable without gumming up your gams.

Now go knock 'em out with your American thighs. See you at the pool!

Village People

Imagine a town where a gal can get a $120 Donna Karan dress for $40, and a young buck can park his truck in a pair of Calvin Klein boxer briefs—normally $18—for a mere seven smackers. Stop drooling and start driving: Such a settlement does exist, and not more than 35 minutes from the civilization of Beantown.

Wrentham Village Premium Outlets is a Disneyland for the bargain-loving New England shopper. With such stores as Versace, Jones New York, Calvin Klein, Donna Karan, Brooks Brothers, Barneys and a humongous Off 5th/Saks Fifth Avenue Outlet, you're bound to walk off with a new wardrobe without breaking your bank.

Stick your finger in these outlets—it's shocking!

Saving big bucks on undergarments at either the Maidenform or Olga Warners stores is enough to give a dame a shopping orgasm. A bra that I pay 21 smackers for cost a mere five here, and was available in the newer, hipper colors. Oooh, baby!

Wrentham Village's colossal Gap Outlet beats other G-shops for bargains. And check out comfy Hush Puppies shoes and Vans sneakers at their outlet stores, where the grooviest foot gear can be up to 60 percent off.

Load up the minivan with your gal pals and head for Wrentham Village Premium Outlets, located directly off Route 495 at exit 15, just north of the intersection with Interstate 95. Call 508-384-0600 for hard-core directions. And, if you see Jack with the whack glasses at the Calvin Klein store, tip him a wink from me.

Dear Discount Dick,

We have a problem. You won't take a trade-in on the Tommy Armour 845s I bought from you a couple years back. But Wayland Golf will. And they'll give me demo sets to play on my home course, before I buy, so I can decide which new clubs I really like best. And once I decide, they'll fit me to make sure they're perfect.

You won't do any of this. But you will let me drive all the way out to nowhere to pay the same prices I'll pay at Wayland Golf.

Thanks for caring, Discount Dick. Oh, and have a nice day.

Your buddy,

Ray

Peeping on Jim Carrey

MOVIES

The Truman Show

By Betsy Sherman

Jim Carrey on TV 24 hours a day. Whew.

Jim Carrey gives us a classic tragicomic figure in Truman Burbank, an average guy whose whole life has been filmed, unbeknownst to him, for a continuously running TV broadcast called The Truman Show. But although director Peter Weir has guided Carrey to his most mature performance as the unwilling celebrity, his Truman Show has shortcomings. It's a clever, provocative and often funny piece of speculative fiction (from an original screenplay by Andrew Niccol), but its storytelling is sometimes awkward.

The film's ad campaign reveals its basic concept (within the film, a mock documentary explains all): Truman is constantly being filmed by minuscule cameras planted all around him. The island community of Seahaven is an environment in a geosphere that has been constructed just for the show. Everyone around Truman is a paid actor, including his wife, Meryl (Laura Linney), his mother (Holland Taylor) and his best friend, Marlon (Noah Emmerich).

Truman, an Everyboy grown into an Everyman husband and office drone, has become a sort of national pacifier. Viewers can tune in on his life whenever they please. Highlight videos feature his rites of passage (no nudity or sex is shown, as we find out from a disgruntled viewer).

The TV show's mastermind, Christof (Ed Harris in a beret), is part artist, part behavioral scientist, part surrogate parent. He has devised a series of control mechanisms to keep Truman on life's straight and narrow—and keep him within Seahaven's limits. This has meant inserting traumatic events into Truman's life, which can be triggered when necessary. For example, Truman's fear of water is associated with a storm in which his father was drowned at sea; Truman becomes paralyzed with grief and guilt at the island's shore. There are, of course, rewards—comfort and love and sex—but with these come obligations.

We meet Truman in his 30th year, when "itchy feet" make him want to see the world. Fiji, he observes in a Walter Mitty reverie, is as far away as one can get (a golf ball is his surrogate globe). His wanderlust coincides with a snafu in the show's production that makes Truman realize he's being watched. A touch of chaos penetrates Christof's carefully controlled world, and we root for Truman to—as was touted in a bad Peter Weir movie—seize the day, gain the dignity that has been denied him and run from under the microscope.

Weir and his team construct a presentation style in which we are complicit in the invasion of Truman's privacy. Bright and shiny Seahaven—a nostalgic environment not unlike the safe/sinister setting of the late-'60s TV show The Prisoner—is shown through a lenslike framing. Camera angles change radically from shot to shot. There's a campy time-warp quality to Seahaven's decor and costumes ('40s and '50s styles, with red used as a stimulator), the better to remain in cheerful denial of technology's dehumanization.

For the story's conceit to work, it's essential that Truman inspire our devotion. A less-manic-than-usual Carrey, with trusting brown eyes and confident body language, makes the guileless Truman someone we can easily feel protective of. Carrey plays it broad, but not cartoonish, as he transforms from an eager puppy with a ready use of snappy phrases ("G'morning, and in case I don't see you, good afternoon, good evening and good night") to a (justifiable) paranoid both angered and exhilarated by his dilemma to a man shaken by doubt and confusion.

The Truman Show's framework is timely, predicting that Big Brother will be a media corporation. But its dark implications are watered down. The characters around Truman—his betrayers—aren't portrayed with much complexity. A serious flaw is Emmerich's flat performance as Marlon. This crucial bond could have been an eerie inversion of Ben Affleck's function in Good Will Hunting, a buddy who tries to steer the hero away from what's good for him. And the inevitable exchange between Truman and Christof is weak. In too many scenes, Carrey, like Truman, is on his own. ✦

AD HOC

Golf Inc.

By Tom Weisend

Keep your eye on the ball. And the money.

WHILE GOLF HAS A REPUTATION as a rather serene sport, its advertising is anything but. Balls land on the moon, logos violently clash on the staid polo shirts and hats the pl wear, and now two of the state' biggest golf purveyors are calling each other names in a lawsu All in all, no longer just anothe at the country club.

Makers of golf apparel and e ment used to have it easy when came to advertising. You put co cials on televised golf matches stuck print ads in magazines lil Digest and Golf. No more. Corpo including EMC, McDonald's, Bellsouth and Ryder Truck have major tournaments named after them in deals that cost more green than most players spend their lives putting upon. As golf has become less of a rich person's pastime, companies like Titleist, FootJoy, Etonic and Spalding have to be more creative to stand out among the plethora of ads.

First, it seems, you've got to pay a lot of money for a spokes-golfer. Tiger Woods seems to be the hawker of choice, making an estimated $50-$60 million for his various endorsements for Nike, American Express and Titleist. Only Michael Jordan earns more as a sports-star-turned-product-pusher, according to Forbes. Coming in right behind Mr. Woods is links legend Arnold Palmer. Also in the top-money tier of endorsers are Jack Nicklaus and Greg Norman, rubbing elbows with the Dennis Rodmans and Shaquille O'Neals of the world.

Local advertiser FootJoy, in a spot from Arnold Communications in Boston, doesn't bother to identify the dozen or so of golf's best-known faces in a commercial called "The Walk," which basically shows a bunch of men (and one woman) striding around after hitting good shots. As the company assures us, they need the right golf shoes to do so.

Once the pro is on board, you've gotta give him (almost never her) something to do. They whack balls that fly through the air at strange speeds and odd angles. They submerge themselves underwater. They talk about what makes their game great. They look really excited when they win a major championship because they had the right ball or club.

Golf companies must supply the hawker with hats, visors, jerseys and ent that bear the 's logo—the he better. At ear's Masters ournament, unexpected winner Mark O'Meara only vore a hat and earing Toyota's s than six weeks orybook victory, s big-time debut in ads for Taylor Made and Top-Flite. His agent told ESPN he's also being considered by at least three other companies.

Trying to break out of this mold, Boston ad agency Greenberg Seronick O'Leary & Partners has taken a U-turn away from pro golfers. It created an Every-dunce golfer in its new Etonic TV and print ads. This hapless duffer is named "Lloyd." On TV Lloyd appears in black and white while the rest of his foursome is in Technicolor. Lloyd is also wearing the wrong golf shoes, and his metal spikes are tearing up the course. If only Lloyd had worn Etonic's spikeless shoe, the commercial laments. If things had stopped there, Lloyd might have eventually been laid to rest next to Burger King's "Herb," the ad sap of all time. But in one commercial, viewers are told that Etonic's shoes are less harmful to golf courses than FootJoy's.

Uh-oh. The Fairhaven-based Titleist, which owns FootJoy, didn't like that. Its lawyers didn't like it either. They sued, claiming that they've been making golf footwear without metal spikes since before Nicklaus won his first Masters. They want money, but the amount is, of course, unspecified.

This is, after all, the gentlemanly game of golf. ✦

Richard Thompson

MUSIC

Richard Thompson

By Paul Robicheau

The longtime songwriter hits Northampton and Harborlights this month

"I STILL DON'T THINK I'VE MADE A GOOD record," says Richard Thompson, a startling comment from a man who has recorded some of the past quarter-century's most acclaimed albums—especially such '80s gems as Shoot Out The Lights (with then-wife Linda), Hand of Kindness and Amnesia.

"What I do is really concert-driven," says the British singer-songwriter, who began his career in the late '60s with folk-rock pioneers Fairport Convention. "That's probably what I do best, is just to perform live. And the records are kinda little documents that creep out every year or so."

So Thompson stays busy on the road, either with a band to support major-label releases on Capitol, or solo acoustic—as he appears this month on a bill with Dar Williams and Bruce Cockburn dubbed "Real Life Stories."

"I'd pay money to see that myself," says Thompson, 49, on the phone from his Los Angeles home. The tour hits the bucolic Pines Theater in Williams' homebase of Northampton June 16, then Harborlights two nights later.

"It's the evil scheming of agents, managers and promoters—they ask you if you want to tour with Neil Diamond and Wayne Newton, and I was less enthused about that," jokes Thompson, who expects he'll play separately and together with upstart Williams and Canadian veteran Cockburn. "No, it's nice to play with people who you feel to some extent are your peers, and people whom you respect and admire."

Those who have seen Thompson live know he has a keen wit that contrasts his fatalistic songs. "It's hard to be jolly on a record," he says. "I can be sardonically witty. That's in the music, but sometimes gets overlookcd.

"Just to get people's attention I suppose I've had to be more outgoing as a performer, which probably isn't my natural tendency, but I enjoy it," he says. "Someone comes up to you after a show and says 'I really liked that song. It really said something to me. I felt this and this,' and you think, gosh, they really got it. Whatever I was trying to communicate actually worked. And that's a very rewarding feeling. That's as good as it gets."

Thompson will play some new songs next to favorites on tour, though he adds, "I like albums to be fresh, to be something that no one's ever heard."

His last Capitol release was 1996's half acoustic/half electric you? me? us? "That was almost the end of my career—I discovered a double CD is a really unpopular thing in the music industry," Thompson says. In 1997, he also released Industry (Hannibal), a stark collaboration with unrelated bassist Danny Thompson musing the history of industrial England, and has authorized mail-order live CDs (produced by his Boston-based soundman Tom Dube) on the Flypaper label through the Internet. "I was horrified to discover just how many CD bootlegs that other people are making money from," Thompson says. "We started a few years ago to release tapes of live shows, hopefully soon after the fact, just as a way to stop the flow."

Thompson's live appeal isn't only his wickedly crafted songs, dusky vocals and wry humor, but his neatly twisted guitar playing as well. As a youth, he listened to Hank Marvin, James Burton and Les Paul, before exploring other instruments for ideas, in styles from traditional folk to jazz.

"If you listen to a pianist, a saxophonist or an Irish piper, and try and put that sensibility onto the guitar, it gives the guitar a very different kind of voice," says Thompson, though he adds, "The focus of what I do is really the song form. That's the thing that really interests me. So I try to bring whatever skills I've got to that, and include it in the package...I try to find ways to arrange a song and play solos that enhance the whole thing."

Now Thompson's son Teddy, 22, is following in his footsteps, and joins him onstage on occasion. "Hopefully my kids that do play music play it because they love it," Thompson says. "It's great to do the job you would want to do anyway....To do it for a profession is a great privilege." ✦

"Out with the old, in with the new" continues in Boston's restless restaurant scene in June. As for the old, Tables of Content in the Midtown Hotel on Huntington Avenue recently closed its doors to diners. It will now focus on catering, both on premises and to such august clients as the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum and the Codman House. Chef/owner Steven Bark continues at the helm.

As for the new, Finale expects to open in midsummer in the renovated Park Plaza space formerly occupied by Stan Frankenthaler's Red Herring and Beehive. Partners Kim Moore and Paul Conforti said they'll offer a light lunch and dinner but the focus will be on dessert, fulfilling a long-overdue need of theatergoing sweet-tooths. Chef will be Dawn Rose, formerly of Providence. Also helping with the launch will be Michael Hu, executive pastry chef of New York's Waldorf-Astoria. Rev up that appetite (and make that dentist appointment): Hu was recently named one of the top 10 pastry chefs in America by Pastry Art and Design magazine.

Starbucks will get a little competition when Le Gamin opens on Tremont Street this month. The coffeehouse/bistro is an import not from the Northwest, but from Manhattan.

With the health inspector's fresh seal of approval, Laurel quietly opened May 15 in the Berkeley Street former home of the Blue Wave (formerly Agatha, etc., etc.). The dining room feels a little like Clio. The menu will be seasonal new American, whatever that is, under the guidance of chef Corey Comeau, formerly of the Blue Wave and Stephanie's. Pastry chef is Kerry Manning, formerly of Grill 23. Can't keep up with all the openings? No wonder: May also saw the debut of South End Grill, Aquitaine and Shenandoah.

Brasserie Jo

Okay, so THE IMPROPER hosted the opening night party at Brasserie Jo. But the place will be sure to survive on its own anyway. The reaction of one recent diner: "This place is so hot I'm having a food orgasm." Do we know how to pick them, or what?

Change is in the air at the Lyons Group restaurants. Jason Dacier is leaving his post as chef at Harvey's after a successful six months to return to Sonsie. Bill Poirier will juggle duties as executive chef for both Sonsie and Harvey's until a replacement is found.

Looking for a Tuscan twist to your standard brunch? PapaRazzi has rolled out a new Sunday brunch menu with an Italian twist. Think fresh fruit bruschetta and Tuscan eggs benedict.

Maybe music suits your mood. More restaurants are jumping on the jazz bandwagon, and we're grateful. Wednesday through Saturday you can hear Darin Ames and his Little Big Band in the heights of The Bay Tower. And you know summer's here because The Terrace at Maison Robert has started up its Thursday jazz series.

You've taken the road bike out for a long spin in the country; doesn't it seem a little counterproductive to now jump into your gas-guzzler to get some dinner? Pedal on over to Redbones, where your wheels will be under the safe scrutiny of the free bicycle valet service. And you can be justly rewarded for all that hard work.

If you're a fan of wine-maven Howie Bauer of Bauer Wines, you'll be glad to know that he's lending his considerable expertise to The Vault. He'll be teaming up with his Bauer boss Susan Fortuna, co-owner of the financial district restaurant. If you love Howie on Newbury Street, you'll love him on Water Street, too. ✦

Owners Lisa Mandy-Rosen and Steve Rosen reflect on shaking it up at Salts.

DINING

Salts

By J. Charles Mokriski

Hospitality and great food crystalize in Cambridge

SALTS IS NOTHING SHORT OF A JEWEL OF a restaurant. Nestled under a whimsical sign in a modest storefront on Main Street in Cambridge, midway between Central and Kendall squares, it occupies space formerly the home of Anago (which has moved to new digs in the Lenox Hotel). The creation of Lisa Mandy-Rosen and chef Steve Rosen, Salts takes its name from the tradition of offering salt as a gesture of hospitality. And indeed, the warm, personal greeting we received made us feel that we had just entered the home of a friend, rather than a commercial establishment.

Salts' intimate dining room, seating just under 50, is lovely. Rough-textured walls are a soothing yellow, somewhere between honey and chamois, above the wainscoting and a charcoal gray below. A huge, concave, framed mirror dominates the room, complimented by striking paintings. Black Windsor chairs, oak flooring, exposed ducts and crisp, white tablecloths complete the decor.

The wine list is engaging, with a number of interesting selections. While there were no bottles priced under $20, markups are surprisingly, almost startlingly, low, making for wine values among the best in the Boston restaurants we have visited. We were delighted with a Marietta 1995 zinfandel ($24), a full-bodied, forward wine, full of fruit but with good structure and a big nose. Salts' excellent hard-crusted bread, made on the premises, was an additional harbinger of good things to come.

Appetizers included a trio of imaginative, well-conceived creations. Maine crab kugel with sorrel and saffron ($9) yielded a substantial crab cake served in a light, delicate sauce. Mercifully bereft of the heavy breading, it was the perfect starter to pique, not sate, the appetite. Chived pierogi with foraged and farm mushrooms ($8.50) was splendid. So often menu scriveners' attempts at catchy names serve only to conceal and confuse the nature of preparations rather than disclose and describe them. In contrast, Salts' name for this dish enhanced our anticipation and enjoyment of the wild and domesticated mushrooms that gave its sauce a satisfying, earthy accent. The pierogi—a classic Slavic tidbit analogous to a ravioli—was filled with mild farmer's cheese. Perhaps our favorite among the appetizers was the smoked-salmon sausage ($8.50). This consisted of thick, almost ethereal cylinders, with a haunting flavor, garnished with al dente zucchini strips and sweet-tangy onions. Horseradish sauce provided a provocative but compatible contrast.

Among main courses, sautéed gray sole with mussels and sweet-pea ragout ($19.50) was first-rate. It was presented in an attractive spiral—in fact, all of Salts' presentations were feasts for the eye—surrounded by plump, sweet mussels and tiny carrots sautéed to perfect al dente texture. Rosemary and black-pea smoked lamb loin with sweet-pepper salad and baked garlic vareniki ($21) yielded a generous serving of rare lamb, garnished with morsels of sweet red pepper, slender green beans and a vareniki—another species of pierogi—stuffed with farmer's cheese and mellow baked garlic. While the strong smoked tea flavor of the lamb was a bit overpowering, the different tastes and textures of this dish created a reasonably harmonious ensemble.

Our favorite main course was the lavender glazed duckling with rhubarb preserves and a potato timbale ($19.50). The preparation and presentation of the duck were classic. Rare, tender slices of juicy duck breast radiated from a drumstick and thigh, on which the lavender glaze had conferred a delectable, crisp, flavorful skin. Carefully sautéed carrots and tiny, crunchy green beans were the perfect accompaniments. Only the superfluous presence of an ugly, flowerless sprig of lavender marred an otherwise flawless dish.

Salts' desserts ($6 each) were not as consistently excellent as the courses that preceded them. One of them, however, chilled vanilla bean and chamomile soup with seasonal fresh fruit, was spectacular. Cantaloupe, honeydew melon, pineapple, orange and strawberries—obviously sliced within minutes of serving—were served in a broth marked by essence of vanilla bean, giving the dish a lively, exotic flavor.

For chocolate lovers, the individual chocolate cake with almond cream delivered good chocolate flavor, and the delightful crunch of toasted almonds was an added bonus. Worthy of forgetting was the strawberry kissel, a sweet strawberry puree that we were hard pressed to distinguish from a rather ordinary strawberry jam; but after such a virtuoso performance, we could forgive the kitchen a minor lapse at dessert.

While we found Salts relatively quiet on a recent Tuesday night, this tiny eatery has become very highly regarded among people who know—and deservedly so. Prudent gourmands would be well advised to reserve well in advance on weekends. ✦

Lawn-mowers

By Peter R. Terhune

Cutting through powerful thirst

IT'S BEEN TWO YEARS SINCE I MOWED A lawn. But even if I never again yank a Toro to life, I'll have a deep and abiding appreciation for the aesthetics of cutting grass.

I'm not saying that every blade cut is an artistic experience; merely that there's more to the task than pushing the mower back and forth and emptying the basket. You've got to adjust the wheel height and tickle the throttle for optimum cutting and fuel efficiency. Are you gonna overlap rows, and if so by a quarter, a third or half? Do you bag or mulch? How will you cover the territory: lengthwise, diagonally, ever-smaller concentric boxes or a combination of all three?

More than just a means to an end, your lawn-mowing technique reveals your character. Doubt me? Drive through a neighborhood where the homes have even a postage stamp-sized lawn and try not to draw conclusions about the lawn's owner based on how the grass is cut.

Which brings me to the subject of lawn-mower beers. People use this term to describe any beer that cuts through thirst after physical exertion. Considering how seriously some people take lawn maintenance, I think it's appalling that we lump together all refreshing beers into a single, monolithic category. Before you dismiss me as some kind of effete lawn-care snob, and way before you head out to do battle with the grass, peruse these lawn-mower/beer pairings I've painstakingly compiled.

PUSH MOWER

The old-fashioned, human-powered mower has its devotees: fossil-fuel-phobes, city dwellers and grass-cutting aesthetes. It's not as fast as a power mower, but the manual is quiet, gives a good workout and allows the illusory satisfaction that you're somehow closer to the craft of cutting grass. Artisanal grass cutting calls for artisanal beers like Belgian saison or gueuze.

Saison is a centuries-old style brewed especially for summer. Orangy-golden, effervescent, medium-bodied and slightly citric, saison typically comes in a 755-ml. bottle (about 22 ounces), a nice size for a thirsty person. Look for Saison DuPont, Saison de Pipaix, LaChouffe Saison and Moinette Artisinale.

Gueuze (pronounced sorta like "cursor") is a blend of old and new lambic, the Belgian style traditionally fermented not with a cultivated strain of brewer's yeast, but by airborne wild yeast and bacteria. Sounds kind of funky, and it can be, but most people's reaction to gueuze is, "Wow, it's like champagne!" Look for gueuzes from Frank Boon, Timmermans and Bellevue.

POWER MOWER

Let the push-mower crowd sneer; for any lawn above tiny, a power mower (whether gas or electric) offers convenience and consistency that's impossible to beat. And it's no physical cop-out; power mowers weigh half again as much as a manual mower, and the ones with powered wheels actually require more wrestling, i.e., more exertion, not less.

That extra exertion coupled with the dust and grass particles that get kicked up can build a powerful thirst. German hefe weizens (wheat beers with yeast) are ideal here; bubbly and crisp, they also contain plenty of yeast to replenish those depleted vitamins and minerals. Recommended brands include Paulaner, Franziskaner, Tucher, Schneider, Julius Echter and Weihenstephaner. American hefe weizens worth checking out include interpretations from Redhook and Pyramid. Failing that, try something ice-cold and domestic, straight from the can: Pabst is my all-time fav.

RIDER MOWER

Get real; you might as well watch lawn-mowing on TV for all the exertion you're gonna incur. The least you could do is drink a summer beer brewed by folks who actually sweated when they made it. Choices include Wachusett Summer Breeze, Geary's American Ale, Gritty's Summer Wheat, Catamount Summer Wheat and Nutfield Hopfest.

Now get mowing. ✦

By JONATHAN SOROFF

Soroff/On CONAN O'BRIEN

Brookline native Conan O'Brien, 35, attended Brookline High and Harvard, where he served as two-time editor of the Harvard Lampoon. Upon graduating, he moved to Los Angeles, joined the writing staff of HBO's Not Necessarily the News and began his career in stand-up comedy. In 1988, he began writing for Saturday Night Live, which earned him an Emmy. In the fall of 1991, he became a writer-producer for The Simpsons, eventually serving as the show's supervising producer. Two years later, he was tapped to succeed David Letterman as host of Late Night, which has earned him another Emmy and the Writers Guild Award for Best Writing. His contract to host what Rolling Stone has called "the hottest comedy show on TV" was recently extended to the year 2002.

Conan O'Brien: Let's just begin this by saying that I'm going to sue you.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, so maybe I should print you using some really offensive language, saying some really tasteless things.

CO: No, don't. My mother just scolded me for an interview I did where I used the f-word. If you do it again, I'm in serious trouble.

JS: So how much do you hate Arnold Schwarzenegger for making your name into a joke?

CO: It really started before that, when I was 12. Conan the Barbarian was a comic book, and there was a place called Kirkman's Market, in the rougher section of Brookline, and on my way there, I'd get surrounded by thugs who said, "Hey, where's your sword, Conan?" And I'd say, "Please, fellows, don't jostle me. You'll upset my butterfly collection." Then they'd pound me for about 45 minutes. But my parents' second choice for a name was Fabio, so I guess I'm better off.

JS: Is Andy Richter the Ed McMahon of the '90s?

CO: No, not yet. Right now he's the Al Roker of the '90s.

JS: Who's the biggest jackass you've ever had on your show?

CO: Well, the person I hit it off with the least was Eartha Kitt. She took exception to everything I said. We were just oil and water. I think she could sense that she was my least favorite Catwoman.

JS: You're a Julie Newmar man?

CO: No question.

JS: OK, who would win in a fistfight: David Letterman or Rosie O'Donnell?

CO: I think Rosie. She's Irish, so she'd do what it takes to win. If she was losing, she'd pick up a manhole cover or a brick or something.

JS: Jay Leno's also from Massachusetts. Is there something in the water here that turns people into talk show hosts?

CO: It's the shitty weather. It drives people to do this for a living. If I'd been raised in California and the sun was shining when I got up and went to school, I wouldn't do this. There has to be something wrong with you to be a comedian, and I trace it back to waking up for school, and it was dark out and raining—tuberculosis weather.

JS: Is being a talk show host more or less dignified than being the guy who sweeps up behind the elephants at the circus?

CO: Much less. At least they're doing something that needs to be done, solving some problem, whereas with talk shows, you can argue that if they went away tomorrow and the networks just started showing reruns of F Troop, the world would pretty much stay the same.

JS: In school, did your report cards say things like "Conan could do better" and "He's a behavior problem"?

CO: No. They were always just about how pale I was. "Conan should not go outside." "Conan should wear a hat at all times."

JS: Are you in therapy?

CO: Oh yeah. I go to a therapist and then have another therapist ride in the car with me to the next therapist. Right now, I'm at a stage where all my therapists are just talking to each other. I don't even have to go; they do group without me. But I hear two of them aren't getting along.

JS: Who watches your show?

CO: Based on the latest NBC surveys, 80 percent of our audience is a prison population or people who have suffered any kind of severe chemical burn or head trauma and need a morphine injection during our time slot. Also, parents of newborns.

JS: Ever had a stalker?

CO: Yes, but she lives in Germany. It's pathetic. She can't take the time or effort to come here, so she writes notes like "If I ever get around to coming there, I'll be outside your apartment, and that would be creepy and inconvenient. Until then, best wishes and warmest regards...."

JS: What's the most degrading thing you'd do to boost your ratings?

CO: Resorting to nudity. Trust me—no one wants to see that.

JS: Ever do your show without pants?

CO: Always, on Tuesdays and Fridays. And there's a Jacuzzi I'm sitting in, so if I sigh or gurgle during an interview, that's what that's about.

JS: Are redheads unfairly discriminated against?

CO: Absolutely. Just look at the cast of TV's Happy Days. Ralph Malph can't get work anymore, and Ron Howard's career didn't really take off until he went bald, whereas we all know Potsie went on to do great things. Wait a minute. There goes my whole theory.

JS: Brookline: Isn't it just Cambridge without all the smart people?

CO: They're letting smart people into Cambridge now? Seriously, though, there are smart people in Brookline, too. Members of Aerosmith have lived there. They're all in their early 60s, but they're still dancing around with 19-year-old girls in their videos. That's the highest sign of intelligence if you ask me.

JS: Finish this sentence: "Brookline High—preparing today's youth for..."

CO: For a job on 60 Minutes, or at Pino's Pizza in Cleveland Circle. Whenever I go to Brookline, that's the first place I go with my brother Neil.

JS: So why don't they have a framed picture of you on the wall?

CO: Because they'd have to take down the picture of Norman Fell—Mr. Roper on Three's Company.

JS: What would happen if they mated Bart Simpson and Cartman from South Park?

CO: I think the anarchistic qualities would cancel each other out and you'd get Linus from Charlie Brown.

JS: The expression "In a pig's eye"—where'd that come from?

CO: Well, people hundreds of years ago only had a butter churn and a pig in their house, so all their sayings had to involve those two things, like "I'll be there in two pumps of the butter churn."

JS: Which Disney heroine would you most like to seduce?

CO: The one in Aladdin—is she of age? Her midriff was exposed, and I'm a sucker for that. All I have to see is a little bit of belly and I go crazy. Man or woman. It doesn't matter. A guy was installing my cable the other day, and I saw his belly for a second and I jumped him. He wrestled me to the ground and fled.

JS: If you were a superhero, what special power would you want?

CO: The ability to make people super-jealous. Y'know, I've always wondered why all the superpowers are good things. Why aren't the bad qualities exaggerated, too? Why isn't Superman super-arrogant, or super-flatulent and perspiring excessively, super-greedy and super-cheap, so the Green Lantern always has to pick up the tab?

JS: Or supercilious?

CO: Exactly. Super-petty, super-callous, super-ignorant of other people's birthdays. Like, "Clark, you know my birthday's Aug. 1." "Sorry, Lois, I could give a fuck."

JS: You're in trouble with your mother now.

CO: Well, there's that lawsuit.

JS: Speaking of flatulence, has a guest ever farted on your show?

CO: I'm not sure. We have some hidden fans, so the audience would know before I would, and we have a charcoal filter in the guest chair.

JS: Are Lucky Charms magically delicious?

CO: I bought them two days ago, and they've added a new thing: shooting stars.

JS: You mean little marshmallows shaped like Courtney Love and Robert Downey Jr.?

CO: Exactly.

JS: If there's such a thing as the luck of the Irish, then explain South Boston.

CO: Well, Good Will Hunting won an Academy Award, so we know there are lots of super-geniuses running around there. In fact, every time I visit Southie, I'm always bumping into super-geniuses.

JS: Jerry Springer calls you and asks for PR advice. What do you tell him?

CO: Have the set made out of Nerf material and don't break up the fights. Maybe put some funny sound effects into it, like "boing, boing, boing."

JS: If you could get one of Charlie's Angels under your desk, which one would it be and why?

CO: Maybe Cheryl Ladd, before she got addicted to Fiddle Faddle and ballooned up to 600 pounds. But I always had a thing for Jaclyn Smith.

JS: The smart one?

CO: No! Who the hell are you? You're not a reporter! This interview is over!

JS: Calm down. What's the funniest thing about Cambridge?

CO: The fact that the street performers make upwards of $400,000 a year. They finish playing the pan flute and then drive off in a Saab.

JS: You wrote for the Harvard Lampoon. Isn't it basically just a bunch of guys sitting around, making up highbrow bathroom humor?

CO: Guys and girls.

JS: So why do normal people say "movies" and people in show business call them "films"?

CO: To prove that they're in show business. It's insider-speak.

JS: If someone made a documentary about you, what would it be called?

CO: The Lucky Idiot.

JS: What should replace Seinfeld in its time slot?

CO: Suddenly Susan. I'm only saying that so that maybe now something will happen with me and Brooke Shields. It has nothing to do with the quality of her show.

JS: What the hell is a Teletubbie?

CO: They're from England, right? I think it'll turn out to be two of the Spice Girls moonlighting.

JS: Do you have any pets?

CO: There are two rats that live in my kitchen. I named one Star Jones and one Debbie Matenopoulos, or whatever that 22-year-old is named on The View—the one who relates childbirth and getting mugged and everything else in life to the time her roommates decided who got the upper bunk.

JS: One last question: Can I be a guest on your show?

CO: Yeah, but it'll cost you: $65,000 or a luxury box at Fenway. I wanna fill it with chicken broth and float around on an inner tube. ✦

Queen of the Night

EMMA WON'T TAKE OFF HER CLOTHES FOR LESS THAN $2,000. AN ALL-NIGHTER COSTS $10,000. BUT THE SERVICE, THEY SAY, IS PRICELESS.

BY JOSHUA RESNEK

No amount of money can buy Emma tonight, and that's what has helped to make her the highest-priced hooker in Boston.

A wealthy Boston businessman who fell in love with her charms gave her $50,000 to stop her from making love with other men. And promised her $500,000 if he could own her for a year, but she said it wasn't enough. Besides, she can't afford to be faithful to one customer.

Emma sells more than her body. She's marketing a whole program, a debauched sexual salad mixed with allure and a thick psychological dressing. Successful men, with aberrant but discriminating taste, accustomed to getting what they want from a woman by paying for it, want her. They want to dress her, to undress her, to kiss her lips, to have her lips kiss them—sometimes on their mouths. They want Emma to feed their sexual addictions, and they're willing to pay the price.

Emma is a hooker, but she's unique. Extraordinary. She's nothing like the women I met when I was driving a cab. Those were the women of the $20, $50 and, on a really big night, $150 variety, who I was transporting to the next customer.

Emma won't be the girl you get when you call an escort service. You won't find her at 2 am walking the streets of Chinatown, where a blow job from a crack addict posing as a lady of the night costs a hundred bucks and you've got to wear a rubber.

Emma doesn't have the names of a thousand businessmen in a black book that will fall into the hands of the police. When you're with her, you don't have worry about being arrested by a cop dressed as a prostitute. Your name won't be published for thousands to see.

You own your secret with Emma.

Age 28, Ivy League educated, Emma is a solo artist. She's Boston's regium donum—the Hub's prostitute supreme.

She grew up beautiful and upper-middle-class in a white house with black shutters and manicured lawn, in a small seacoast town on the North Shore where her parents still live today. (Some identifying details in this article have been altered at the subjects' requests.)

I didn't know girls like her when I grew up in Marblehead—but maybe I did. Maybe you can't see an Emma at 11 or 14. Maybe they burst forth, like the spring, at 21, as she did.

By day, Emma is a twentysomething, beautiful, intelligent young woman struggling to make her place in a man's world. In a downtown office building she plays the hard-nosed, predatory business lady on the sell side of the bond desk at a local financial firm. Her long, black hair is always tied into a neat bun. Her cleavage is hidden, tucked away under a silk blouse and a conservatively cut suit jacket. Thick-rimmed, black reading glasses round out the daytime persona.

At night, Emma takes a page from Kafka, metamorphosing into a beguiling beauty with a perfect body, a perfect face and a perfectly fetching attitude that seems to say: "Come get me, but I'm the most expensive fling you'll ever know. Try me. I'm the best."

Indeed. Emma's customers tell me the sex is sublime, nothing I would know. And I know a fair bit at 48, a transplant from Marblehead to Chelsea, who likes watching the action on city streets much better than manicured lawns.

It is a Saturday afternoon in April. The sun is shining, and the cherry blossoms on Comm. Ave. are in full bloom. The Back Bay is crowded with shoppers and tourists.

Inside her elegant Beacon Street condo, Emma steps from the shower and dries herself in front of a full-length mirror. She always seems to be looking at herself, into herself, and she likes what she sees. She hums a popular song as she prepares for a noontime appointment.

When she's finished drying her hair and dressing, she looks herself over one more time, in the full-length mirror by her front door, to make sure everything is the way she wants it.

She turns right, in a model's pose before the mirror. Then she turns left. Then, right again. She tips her chin downward slightly and winks at herself. She snaps her head back, whipping her long black hair across her face. She slips on a tan Armani raincoat, buttons it up and enters the elevator for the ride down to the garage.

The Saab convertible starts right up. Emma blends into the traffic on Beacon Street. Two guys wearing ball caps and gold chains and driving a BMW eye her and swing their coupe close to the Saab, stopping next to it at a red light at the corner of Hereford and Beacon streets.

"Hey, beautiful, do you want to party with us today?" the driver of the BMW asks. His buddy strains for a glimpse of Emma.

She smiles.

The light turns green. Emma turns her head. She presses down hard on the gas pedal. The Saab jumps forward and speeds down Beacon Street.

Inside a lavishly appointed penthouse overlooking the Charles River, the heavy curtains are drawn in a long living room with high ceilings and ornate oak paneling. Museum-quality oil paintings hang on the walls, heavy furniture and fine Oriental rugs fill the room and candelabras, lit for the occasion, illuminate the centuries-old portraits.

A solitary figure sits rigidly in a heavy, high-backed chair at the end of the room. He looks as regal as some of the 18th-century gentlemen depicted in the paintings.

It's Robert, a three-times-married and three-times-divorced whoremaster epicurean, waiting with anticipation for his Saturday session. Robert is a nouveau riche Bostonian who made millions as a venture capitalist during the 1980s, then squandered the millions on fine wine, gambling, drugs and women. Two of his three wives were strippers, and he loved them as much as some men love virgins.

J. Wayne

Robert's become a millionaire again lately, a coincidence of his genius and the rising stock market. For all his accumulated wealth, the Comm. Ave. penthouse and a degree from Harvard, he'll never be accepted among the ruling class in the Back Bay.

Of course, like most men who prefer paying for women rather than seducing them, he could care less about what people think.

In reality, he's a bit of a stiff. In fact, nearly everything about Robert is starched—his white shirt, his freshly pressed pleated wool pants, his shiny black tasseled shoes and his glistening hair, which he has combed back with pomade, without a part, the way Valentino might have done.

Robert seems completely lost in time, mesmerized by what lies ahead, when the antique bells of a grandfather clock in the hallway chime that it is noon.

Emma struts into the room. She is dressed in Robert's favorite get-up: a loose-fitting man's Armani raincoat, high heels, a tight French bra, white stockings with garters and tiny black bikini underwear that's up her ass like a thong bathing suit. Standing in front of Robert, she pulls a Churchill cigar from her raincoat pocket, wets the tip of it, holding it firmly with her fingers, and licks it all around with her tongue before putting it to her lips.

Then she sticks it into her mouth and finally lights it, sucks on it, slides it in and out of her mouth with a great deal of animation.

Robert smiles. Emma returns a warm grin.

This is what he likes, and she aims to please, for if Robert is kept happy, he not only showers Emma with his affection, but he pays her lots of money.

Robert is particularly pleased to have Emma standing in front of him smoking a cigar. He has been thinking about her all week. Like many high-powered rich men who prefer to pay women for their pleasure, he is enthralled by the afternoon's prospects. Standing in front of him, the cigar dangling from her mouth, Emma unbuttons the raincoat slowly. She lets it slip down from her shoulders, over her arms, until it falls onto the parquet floor. She turns around and bends over, thrusting her buttocks into Robert's face. She knows how much he likes this.

He tries to grab her, but she moves back a few steps.

Early on, Emma learned that if this charade were going to work with Robert, she could not give herself away easily. He likes a fight, or at least to feel that she might withhold from him the pleasures he pays for. In this respect, she knew she couldn't be successful if she were submissive, like the three women he married.

Emma straightens up slowly, deliberately and stares into Robert's eyes. He's delirious with pleasure at the sight of her body.

She puts her arms behind her back, pushing her breasts outward and unhooks her bra. Then she holds her forearm under her breasts before letting the bra fall to the floor.

With her fingers, she circles her nipples. Then, with the panache of a Broadway stripper, she pulls down her underwear.

Now she walks brazenly over to Robert, and offers up a breast for his enjoyment.

Emma remembers her childhood as normal. She was never sexually abused. "My childhood was idyllic," she recalls. "I've always been pampered and told I was beautiful, and that I could do whatever I wanted. My parents gave me every benefit of their love and affection to help me be who I am."

Her father was a shoe manufacturer. Her mother a schoolteacher. They still live in the home where she grew up.

Emma made love for the first time when she was 16, a junior in high school. "My first time was with an older guy, 31. He was great. It was a wonderful experience. I enjoyed the act right from the start," she says. "At Brown, I wasn't promiscuous, but I probably made love with 25 guys, and really, I never had a bad experience. I've got a thing for rich, preppy types," she laughs.

When her father's business went bankrupt, in 1990, she was entering her junior year at Brown. Her father paid her tuition, but she had to go to work to make ends meet. Her introduction to prostitution was part out of necessity, she says, and part by doing what came naturally, although she kept her prostitution a secret from family and friends. "Right then and there, I realized I was completely broke," she says. "That's when I decided that I wasn't going to give away anymore what men would pay me for. I joined an escort service in Manhattan catering to very rich older men who wanted companionship, or a dinner partner. I told my parents a wealthy friend in my sorority was helping me out. They were delighted."

She didn't even have to make love with the old men in Manhattan. Many of them, she recalls bemusedly, couldn't even get hard. The difference then from now is that Emma didn't understand the score when she was starting out. She wasn't willing to service men the way she does today. Now, with big cash on the line, she does as her clients ask her to do, willingly, and with a smile.

"When I first met Robert I had just graduated from Brown and was in Boston trying to get a job," she says. "I signed on with a local escort service that advertises in the Phoenix. Robert and I met. It was my first call—and the last—for that answering service. He fell in love. I love him, too, but not exactly the way he loves me."

Robert pays her $2,000 for the afternoon striptease and cigar-smoking routine, she says, $2,000 more if they make love and a flat-rate $10,000 if she spends the night and there is a session in the morning. "When I spend the night I try to make it very special for Robert. I may have another woman come over and all of us get it together, or it can just be ourselves," she says.

"Robert likes to watch. He's a wonderful spectator," she says puckishly, "always willing to jump right in."

Sometimes, Robert also pays her to be at dinner parties with business guests from out of town. He pays her $500 an hour for the little extras, like a flash of her pubic hair or dressing like a man.

She will not perform one minute of work without being paid.

Robert will ask her to take it all off at dinner parties. She does a seductive striptease, discarding the shirt, the skirt, the bra, the underwear, until dressed only in suspenders and boots. She parades past all the guests, sits on their laps and places her breasts in their faces.

The guests ante up $200 each for such favors.

Emma claims to be a feminist. She's for abortion rights. She's against the death penalty. She believes laws forbidding prostitution are ridiculous, but she is basically apolitical. She has no illusions about her work, and of what might happen to her if a client compromised her confidentiality. She dreads that her parents, or her employer, might one day find out her secret.

This doesn't stop her, nor others like her, from plying the world's oldest profession in puritan Boston. "I know a half-dozen women my age doing the same things as I am. I don't believe any of them is making as much money, but then, maybe they're not as good as me," she shrugs.

These days, Emma is servicing four "clients," three in the Back Bay, including Robert, and one in Beverly Farms. They range in age from 44 to 61. They're all married. "This isn't like being a lawyer or a doctor, you know," she says of her profession. "It's hard to know where you stack up next to your colleagues. I don't think THE IMPROPER is likely to call soon and tell me I'm on Boston's Best list."

What does she do with her money?

"High-tech, high-risk, small-cap mutual funds and, more recently, the banking stocks. I was way ahead of my colleagues when Citibank announced its merger with Travelers Insurance," she says with pride. "My play money is in the place where I think it will skyrocket over the next decade. And that's with companies and industries involved with human passion. So I'm buying Astar Casinos, which owns the Tropicana in Las Vegas, and Harley-Davidson and Playboy, which owns a part of America's soul."

Returning Sunday afternoon to her apartment after an all-day, all-night session with Robert, Emma is circumspect. She is also $10,000 richer. "I'm not going to spend the rest of my life turning expensive tricks for men who pay me to pretend I love them," she says wistfully. And then, with a little more reflection: "I'd like to be married someday to a nice man I'm in love with, who's genuinely in love with me. I'd like to have kids, a dog and a nice house in the suburbs, maybe on the ocean."

She studies her calendar planner, marking out Xs to denote her appointments with clients in the week to come. "Money isn't everything," she says, "but it's all I care to think about right now." ✦

Standing up to Comedy

What it's like to bomb every night. And still love it.

by Eric S. Arnold

Tracy Powell

To my knowledge, there are only three requirements for becoming a successful stand-up comic: First, you must have been teased incessantly throughout childhood to the point that getting laid during adolescence was purely out of sympathy; second, you must have been in therapy; third, you must be an alcoholic.

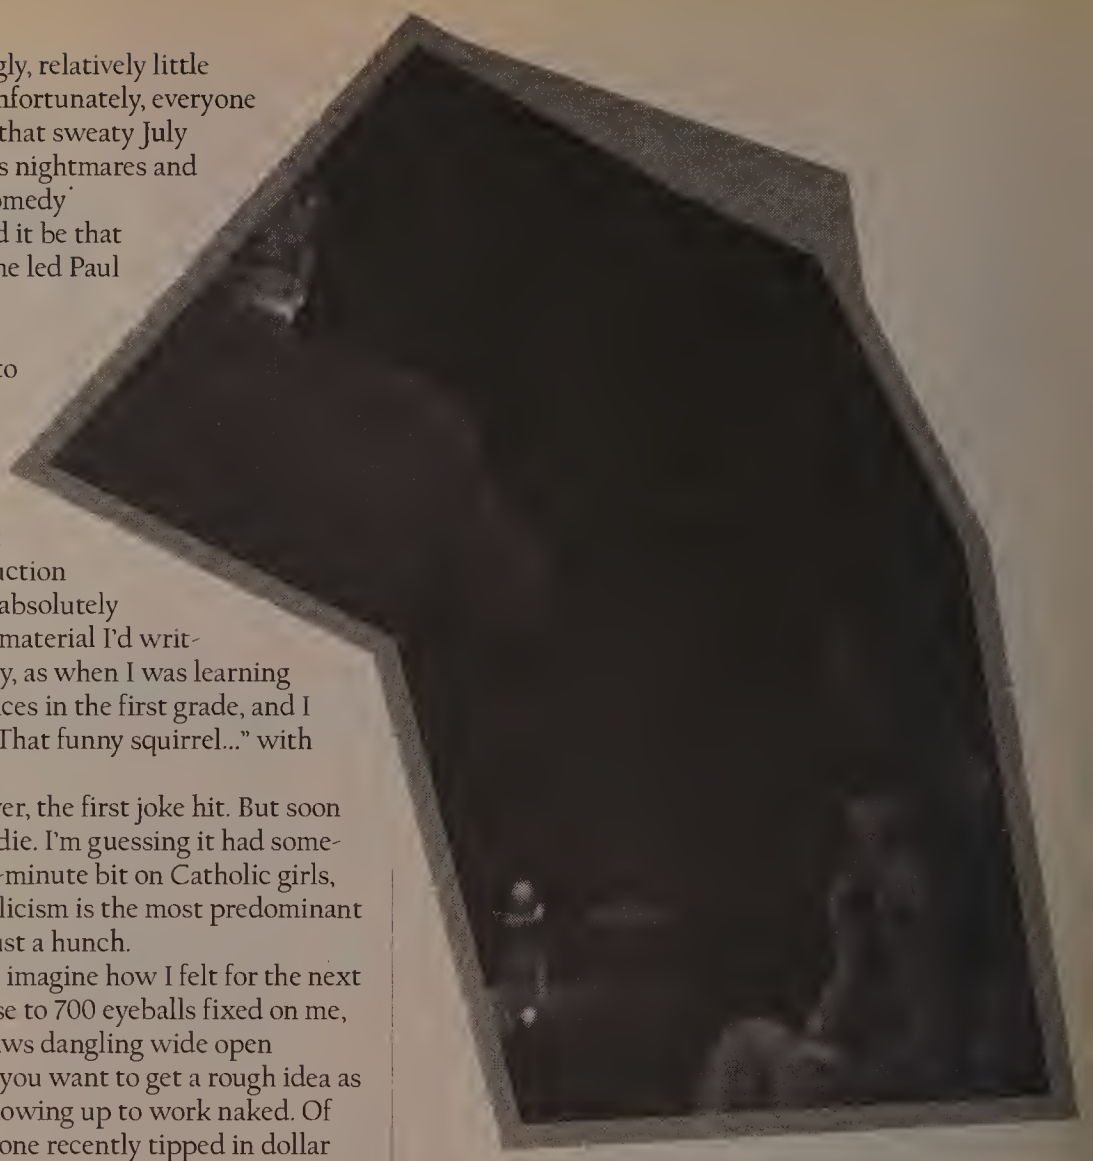
I had the first two down cold, and believe me, I made a valiant attempt at the third. But the curse of having a naturally low alcohol tolerance made my endeavors futile, and I was never to become a full-time stand-up comic. However, my addiction to the writing process (combined with abusing caffeine while hunched over a computer equipped with Minesweeper) cast me out of basement comedy clubs and into Jay Leno's joke-writing circle.

My attempt at a stand-up career began the summer after my freshman year at Boston University. My cash supply was dwindling, and a friend of mine who was waitressing at the Comedy Connection knew that the club was seeking someone to wear a bow tie and annoy passersby and tourists with fliers for $5 an hour. In other words, they were looking for someone pathetic. Naturally, I'm slightly offended that my friend thought I fit the bill.

After about a month on the job, I worked up the nerve to ask Paul Barclay, the club's owner, if I could take the stage. Surprisingly, relatively little begging was required. Unfortunately, everyone who saw me perform on that sweaty July evening probably still has nightmares and hasn't returned to the Comedy Connection since. (Could it be that the ensuing lack of income led Paul to open The Rack?)

When the big night arrived, I was worked into the lineup with such local greats as Steve Hurley, Tom Cotter and host DJ Hazard. It was only at the instant that DJ began my introduction that I realized there was absolutely nothing funny about the material I'd written. Not even accidentally, as when I was learning to write complete sentences in the first grade, and I filled in the blank after "That funny squirrel..." with "...was a retard."

To my surprise, however, the first joke hit. But soon thereafter did the fervor die. I'm guessing it had something to do with my two-minute bit on Catholic girls, given the fact that Catholicism is the most predominant faith in Boston. But it's just a hunch.



It might be difficult to imagine how I felt for the next several minutes with close to 700 eyeballs fixed on me, not to mention the 350 jaws dangling wide open beneath all those eyes. If you want to get a rough idea as to how I felt, I suggest showing up to work naked. Of course, this excludes anyone recently tipped in dollar bills by Mo Vaughn.

Even though I proved myself a worse performer than River Phoenix in his current state of being, I experienced a rush like I'd never felt the very instant I stepped off the stage, back into anonymity. It was a striking, thick, invigorating sensation, almost like the blast of heat on your face as you open the oven door to see if the muffins are done.

I had to perform again.

Unfortunately, the only gigs I could find were in basements: The Comedy Vault on Boylston and Daisy Buchanan's on Newbury. Worst of all was Maxwell Jump's near Northeastern, where I performed for a crowd of two, both with their backs turned since the wall paneling was apparently of more interest.

The summer of stand-up hell came to an end, and my roommates my sophomore year believed that I actually could be funny. So I helped one of them arrange a show in our dorm. I even brought in some of Boston's best comics to perform, including Jim Lauletta, Greg Carey and Dane Cook. And even though my material was only slightly funnier than an after-school special, I did OK. Maybe I could do this, I thought. And then again, there isn't much that a sophomore in college thinks he or she can't do (especially after drinking a large quantity of Bud Light).

So I hit the road, with comedian Mike Prior, for a weekend gig at a Chinese restaurant in Salem, N.H. Hey, it sounds lame (and it was), but for me at the time, it certainly was a step up from performing in a basement infested with a species known to dwell only somewhere on the North Shore.

But I bombed again—miserably. Mike lectured me during the entire trip home, and though he later apologized for his tirade, he gave me the best advice I'd ever received. "Don't insult your audience," he told me. Later on, when I actually became a slightly better performer, I took that to mean, "Don't insult their intelligence," but in this case he was telling me literally not to insult them.

"If they don't laugh at a joke and you tell them they 'suck a big bag of donkey dicks,' " he instructed, "you can't expect them to laugh at the next joke."

To my surprise, the first joke hit.

Finally, I started to understand. There were mechanics I needed to develop. In a sense, learning to perform stand-up was like going through puberty all over again. Of course, with less masturbation this time around. Nevertheless, I still felt as though I could get some enjoyment out of it.

And to this day, I've never told anyone that they suck a big bag of donkey dicks. Except for my ex-girlfriends and BC hockey players, but only when separated from them by Plexiglas. And I don't mean the BC hockey players.

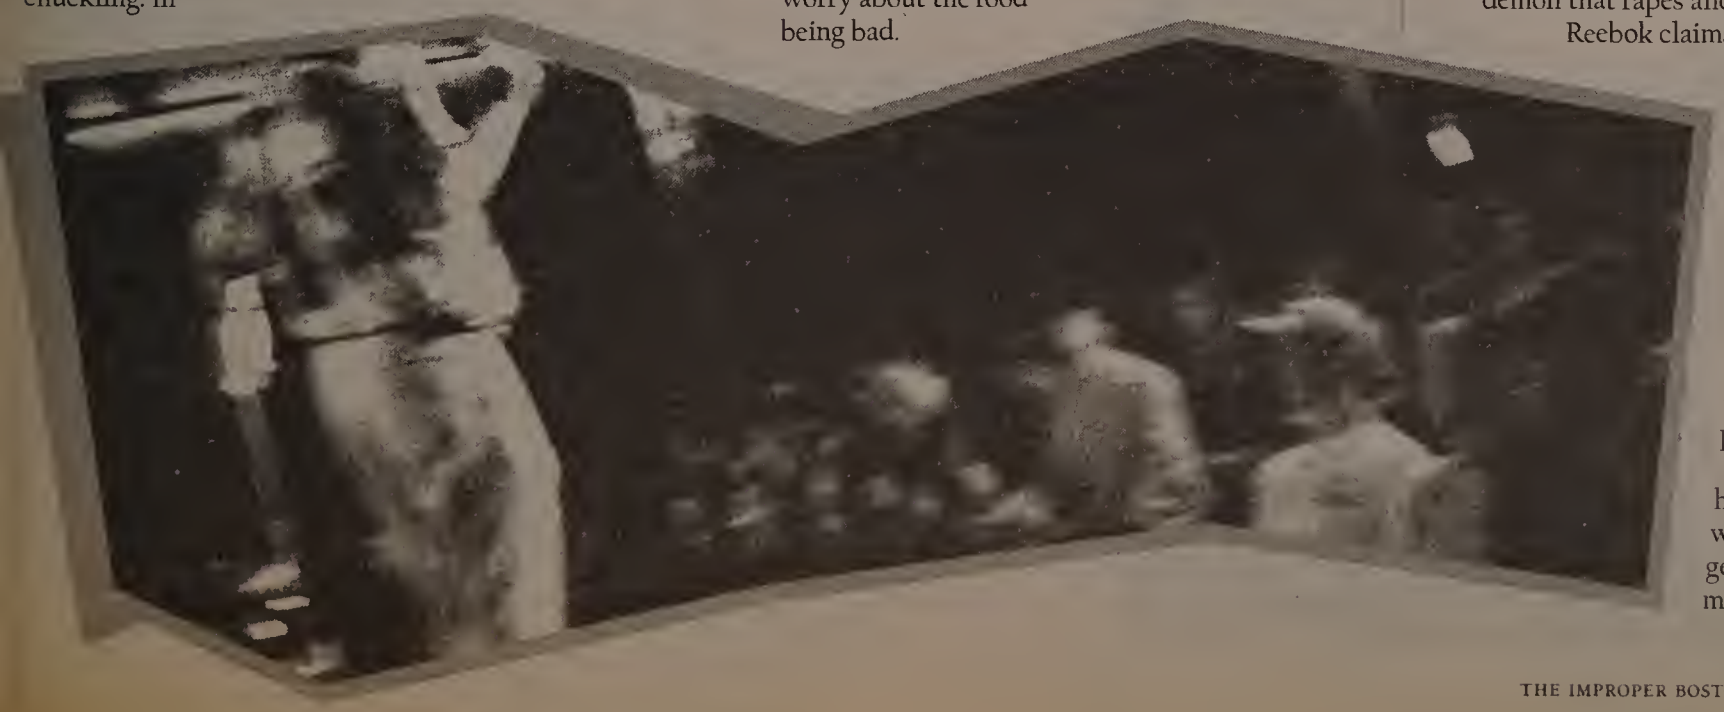
I continued performing, but mostly at shows my roommate and I had arranged for other students. It was fine for me, since it paid well for someone who wouldn't make a nickel at the art otherwise, and I hated the club scene. I still hate it. I'd say that 99.9 percent of being a comic involves showing up at clubs with little to no intention of performing that night, and just smiling and schmoozing with other comics, bookers and groupies, all of whom you have to pretend to like if you want to perform some day before hell freezes over. I did that for about two months before the mere thought of "hanging out," as comics call it (being fake, as I call it), made me physically nauseous. When "hanging out," I always felt like a kernel in a turd. No matter what I went through, my status and personality remained unchanged. And in the end, I was just surrounded by shit.

Because of my aversion to "hanging out," I was asked to perform at clubs about as often as Jesse Helms hugs a homeless vet. My biggest break was being invited to perform the night before BU's graduation for a distinguished alumni show with veteran comics Greg Fitzsimmons, Jeffrey Ross and Janine DiTullio. It went so well that Janine, a full-time writer with Late Night with Conan O'Brien, was never invited back, and I'm now among the annually invited. It felt good to kick some professional ass.

Confident as I felt, stand-up no longer gave me the euphoric sense that it did that first night on stage. Like a cocaine addict, I kept trying to achieve the same high as the first time, and I always fell short. (Mom and Dad, if you're reading this, really, it's just an analogy.)

A few months later, I saw a behind-the-scenes story on Dateline that showed the The Tonight Show's daily monologue writing process, and I was captivated. These guys were the brightest and the best—the source of all the jokes told around office water coolers. But Dateline left out something that I remembered hearing from other comics: An unknown number of people across the country, under contract with The Tonight Show, fax in material for Jay to use during the monologue.

From that day on, I sat down with two or three newspapers, a pen, a pad of paper and a cup of coffee the size of your average economy car. I fell in love with the writing process, even if it was three in the morning, and I was the only one awake to laugh at my jokes. And the only reason the jokes were funny in the first place was because it was 3 am.



I would call my friends and run jokes by them on a daily basis. I usually got more laughs out of the friends who were still stoned from the night before, but they helped my self-confidence by at least chuckling. In fact, my stoner friends had to have been on some strong drugs if they laughed at jokes like these:

- The No. 1 Christmas toy this year was the Tickle-Me-Elmo. Coming in at a close second was the Fondle-Me-Barbie.
- When Al Gore met with South African leaders, one of them asked Gore to dance the macarena. He did, but nobody noticed.
- An Ethiopian airliner was hijacked and crashed into the ocean when it ran out of fuel. Hey, you might have to worry about terrorism on an Ethiopian airplane, but at least you don't have to worry about the food being bad.

I continued writing more and more jokes for the next six months, just picturing Jay Leno delivering my lines and the audience roaring and clapping. I even wrote with his style and voice in mind. And as much as I idolize Jay, having his voice inside my head for a few hours a day really started to torture me. It probably wasn't as bad as the pain I inflicted on my friends over the phone, but at least the jokes got a little better over time:

- If you're in a village of cannibals, and they offer you a nice hot cup of joe, do you drink it?
- Reebok announced that it's changing the name of its Incubus shoe line, since that's the name of a demon that rapes and impregnates women. Reebok claims they didn't know what the name meant, but you'd think Wilt Chamberlain's endorsement would've given it away.
- British schoolchildren will now have scratch 'n' sniff history textbooks. In fact, when they scratch a picture of President Clinton, they smell a perfume that's not Hillary's.

After I'd collected several hundred jokes (about four of which were funny), I decided to get some second opinions. I mailed packages of material to

Never been to a comedy club? Take a deep breath and dive right in. Actually, dive is the operative word: The toniest of Boston's comedy clubs has the appeal of a high-school gym. You pays your money and you takes your chances, too. Some nights can be great, and others can be real duds. Even on a good night, the talent can be all over the place. Of course, there are all sorts of humor out there. There's the stuff you're glad you went to college for (rare) and the stuff that makes you want to take a shower after listening to (quite common).

Here are some of the places around town where your funny bone might get tickled. Or not.

BACK ALLEY THEATER. Funky Inman Square is at its funkiest, most improvisational with "Improv Boston" in residence. 1253 Cambridge St., Cambridge; 576-1253.

COMEDY CONNECTION. We're not saying that cast members of Saturday Night Live hang out here, but they've been known to show up. Monday is the open-mike night, hosted by comic Kevin Knox; if you have the urge to perform, call Joey ahead of time. 245 Quincy Market Bldg., Faneuil Hall Marketplace; 248-9700.

THE COMEDY STUDIO. Hey, you can have a mai tai downstairs at the Hong Kong Restaurant, then head up to the third floor for the weekend live comedy. 1236 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 661-6507.

DICK DOHERTY'S COMEDY VAULT. Downstairs from Remington's, this used to be a bank vault. Not for the claustrophobic. Extreme extroverts will enjoy open-mike nights on Sunday. 124 Boylston St., Boston; 800-401-2221.

IMPROV ASYLUM. This place just opened in the North End, featuring improvisation comedy Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. 216 Hanover St.; 263-NUTS(6887).

NICK'S COMEDY STOP. Nobody gives out prizes for decor at comedy clubs, and Nick's is no exception. You're supposed to be listening, not looking, anyway. The stage is open to all comers on Wednesdays at 8:30; call Pauline for scheduling. 100 Warrenton St., Boston; 482-0930.

various writers and producers, and Bill Scheft of The Late Show was nice enough to read what I sent him. Although he didn't like anything I wrote, his brief rejection note—"None of the material seemed to fit Dave's persona or sensibilities" —gave me even more encouragement. This was exactly what I wanted to hear, since I had Jay's persona in mind from the beginning. Sickly enough, like a frat boy in Wonder Bar, I found satisfaction in rejection.

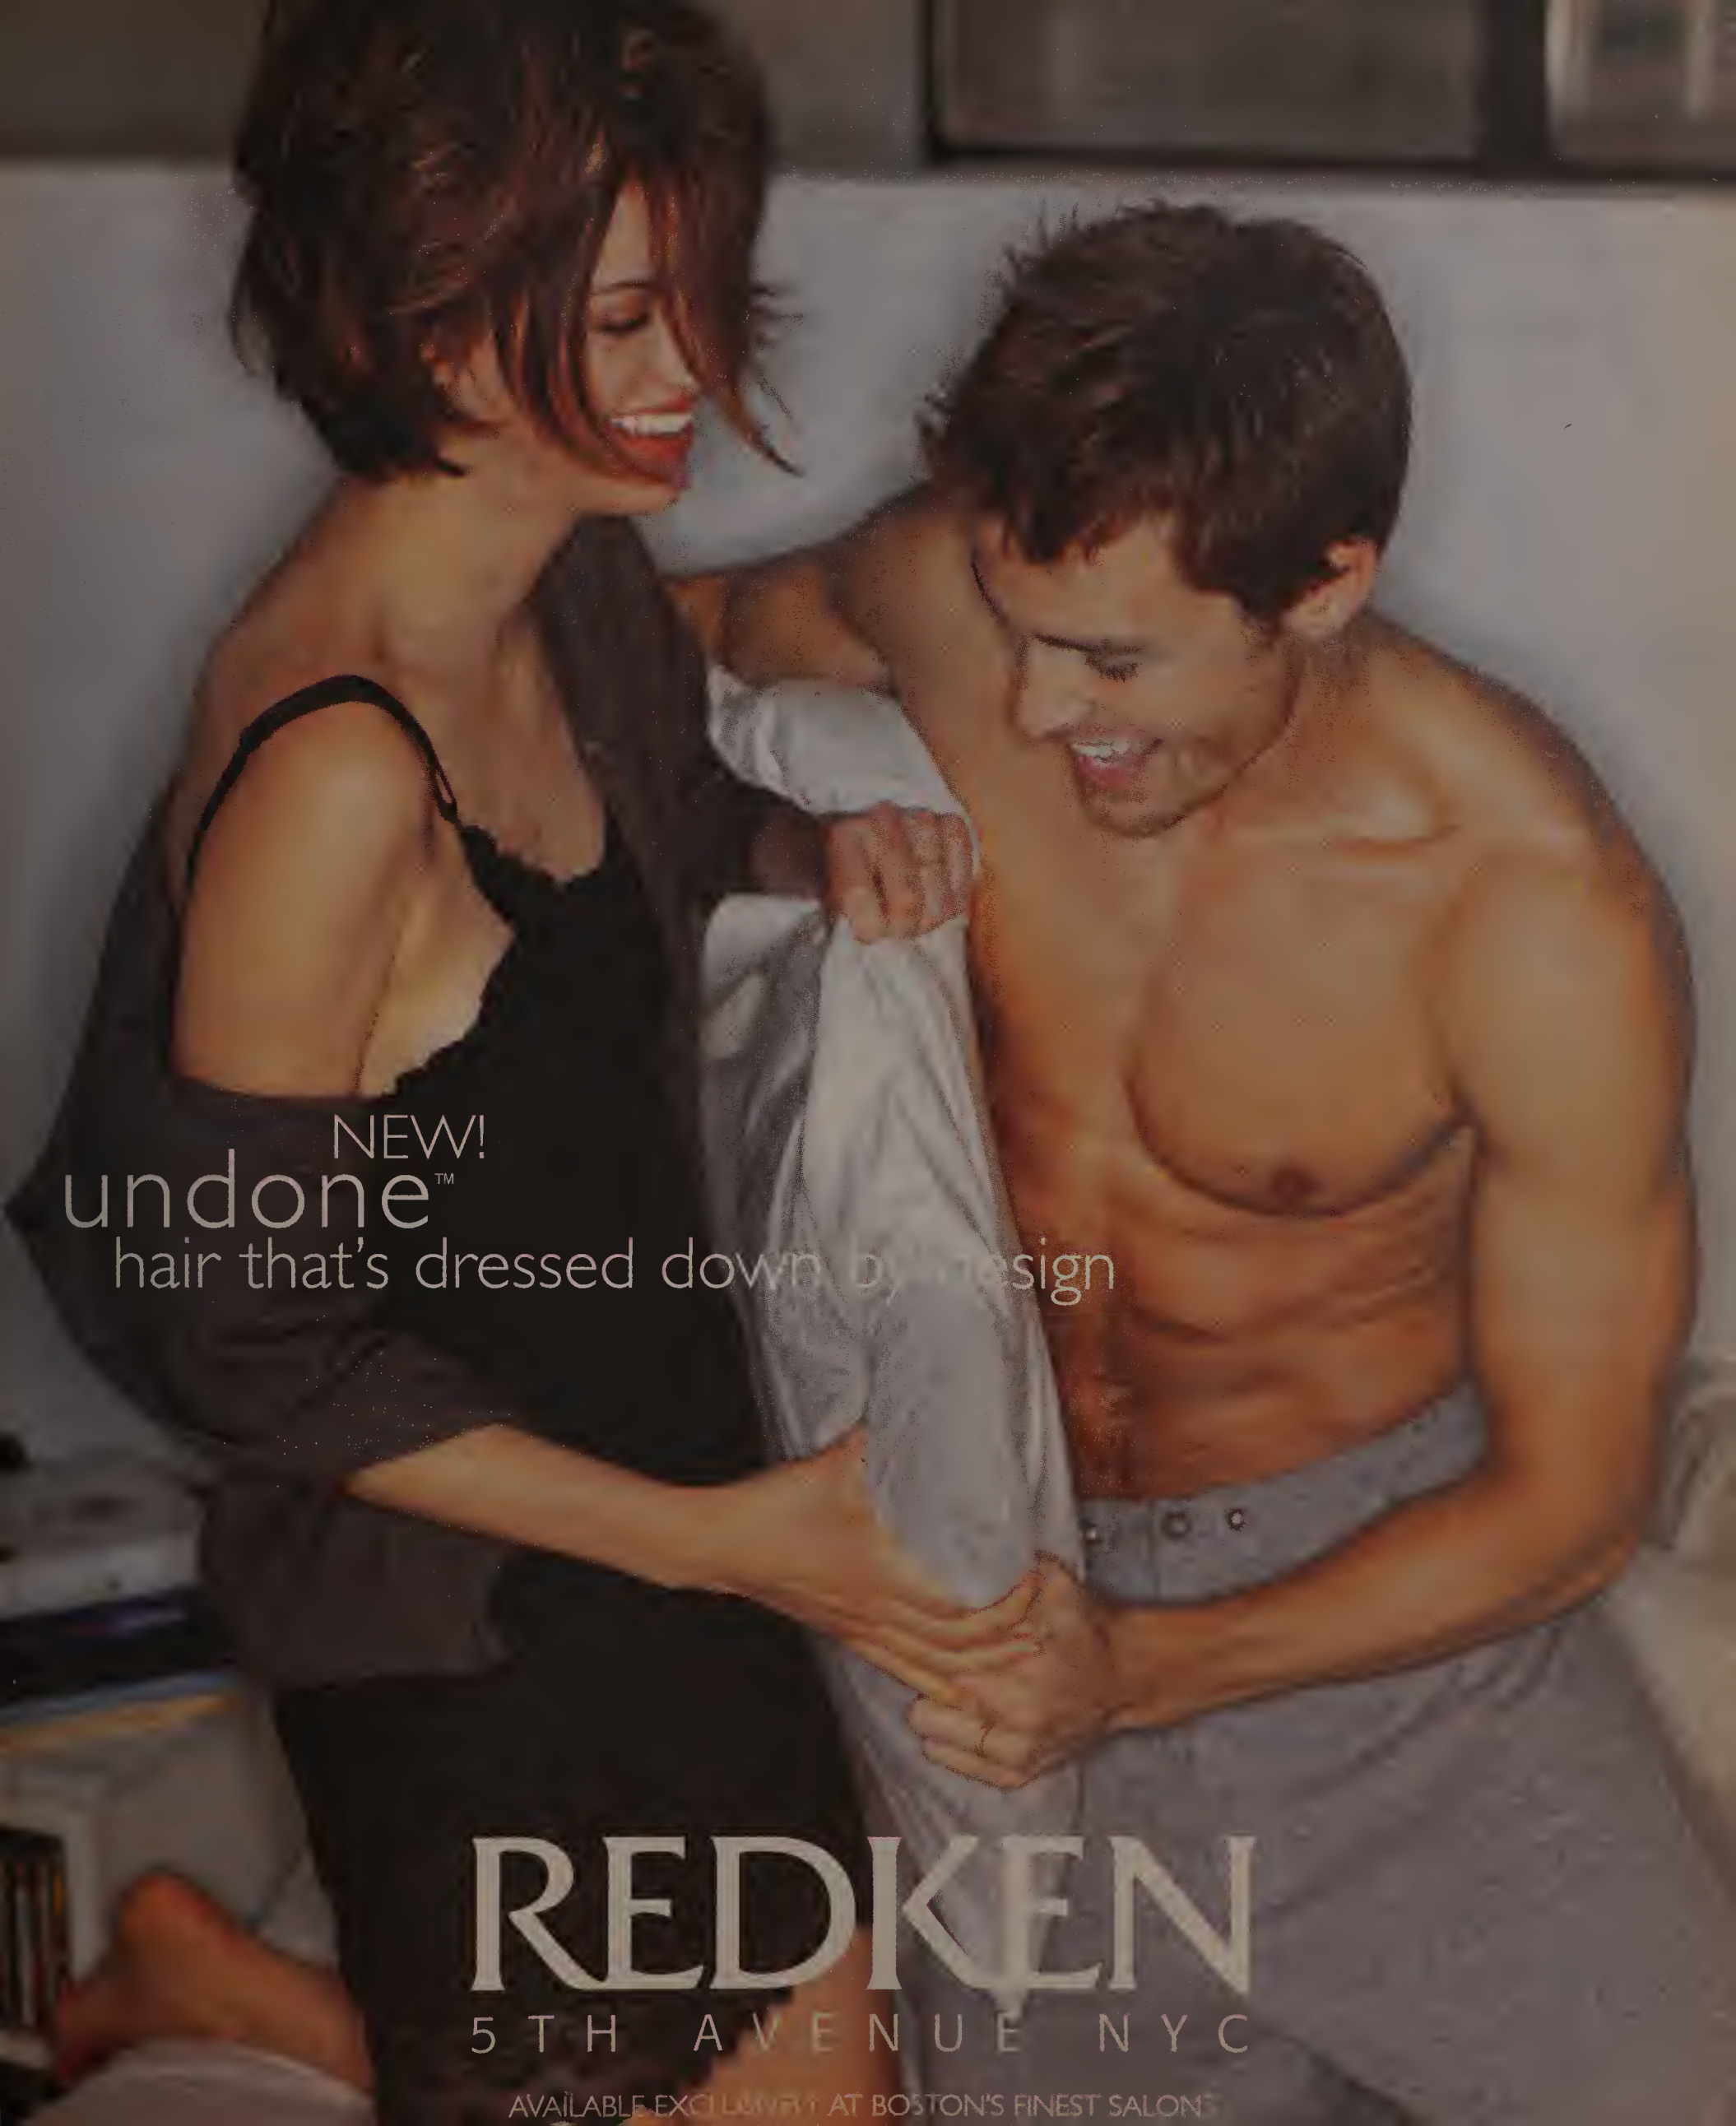
"We saw Jay tell this really funny joke…it must be yours."

After I heard from Scheft, I called Jim Brogan, the head monologue writer at The Tonight Show. Even though he'd already explained to me in a previous call that they didn't take submissions anymore, I couldn't give up. I figured that if Scheft was willing to read my material, I could get Brogan to read it. Phone tag ensued, and maybe he just didn't want to be bothered anymore, but he left me a message telling me to call Jay's assistant and to have her send me a contract to freelance write. He assured me that they would read my submissions, but most importantly, he told me to just keep writing.

Well, I wrote for six more months, and my answering machine constantly repeated the voices of friends and relatives saying, "We saw Jay tell this really funny joke tonight. We figured it must be one of yours." Sadly, no, it never was one of mine. And the worst part of not having my material make it onto the air was occasionally seeing Jay bomb throughout the entire monologue, and knowing, just knowing, that I'd sent him a gem or two that morning. Rejected Jay jokes:

- On this day in 1513, Spanish explorer Ponce de Leon arrived in Florida. He's still one of the state's youngest residents.
- Actor Tony Randall became a father at age 77. Which is economical if you think about it, since both he and the kid are wearing diapers.
- The state of Texas has announced that they're building two more prisons. Actually, they only need one—for the other they can just put a lock on the door of the Dallas Cowboys' locker room.
- A new study shows that 80 percent of young doctors don't even know how to use a stethoscope. On the bright side, since that whole medical marijuana thing, all of them have learned how to use a bong.
- Woody Allen is returning to New York's jazz scene on Monday nights—you can see him play jazz clarinet in a New York club. Tickets cost $45. But kids get in free.
- The Rolling Stones played at Madison Square Garden the other night. Go figure, they beat the Knicks.

I wrote more and more for the next several months, and my disappointment deepened such that I could write, but I couldn't watch The Tonight Show. Later, I even gave up writing jokes for about three weeks, and the next time I sat down at the computer,



I had about as many ideas as Keanu Reeves has had in his entire life—zero. I quit.

When I came home the next day, my only piece of mail was an envelope with a return address of a post office box in Burbank.

Instantly, I knew what was inside, and even the screams of a girl being landed on by Drew Bledsoe at the Paradise could never match the emotion and decibel levels I reached when I ripped open the envelope: Inside was a check signed by the current king of late night himself, Jay Leno.

Nowhere on the check was it indicated what joke he used, and to this day, I have no idea what words of mine Jay repeated to millions. I don't know if anyone laughed, cried, clapped, groaned or sat in silence, and I don't care to ever find out. But the check did note that Jay used a joke on that very last day I wrote, before I gave up.

Since then, I've written when I've felt inspired, but no more checks have come. Maybe the other joke faxers are better at it, or maybe Jay only bothers to read his faxes as often as the average single guy cleans his bathroom, but it doesn't matter to me. I still have the liberty to write when I want to, and I know that with hard work and determination, I can someday again play with the big boys. Outside the confines of my shower, that is. ✦

Improper choices for weeks of June 3 - June 16

Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday	Sunday	Monday	Tuesday
JUNE 3	JUNE 4	JUNE 5	JUNE 6	JUNE 7	JUNE 8	JUNE 9

A Silver Lining

A retrospective show by former master chef of Upstairs at the Pudding-turned-photographer Michael Silver can be seen at The Arthur Griffin Center for Photographic Art (67 Shore Road, Winchester; 781-729-1158) through June 21, but what better time to see his wonderful images of the last 10 years than now.

Play That Funky Music

Get your groove on at Dominic's (261 Tremont Street) upstairs haunt for VIBE—hosted by resident DJs Jynx and Prima who spin a mix of house, progressive and drum & bass music so you can dance, dance, dance. The two local DJs have just recently started this special night which is sure to be a hit with clubsters and wannabes.

Kiss a Frog

Puppets are not just for kids. To prove this fact jump over to the Puppet Showplace Theatre (32 Station Street, Brookline) and see the Crabgrass Puppets perform "The Frog Prince." In the show one princess must let a slimy frog eat from her plate, drink from her cup and sleep on her pillow.

Lady in Red

And man in red also. Marjorie Morgan and Brian Crabtree's latest postmodern dance/performance art collaborative, Wear More Red, is both inventive and imaginative and will surely entertain you. With billings on the program called "My Spammy Art," "Four Legs" and "Parse," why wouldn't it? The show can be seen at Green Street Studios in Cambridge and tickets cost $12.

Morgan & Crabtree perform at Green Street Studios.

Fair Game

Starting at 1 pm the eighth annual Central Square Worlds kicks off in—go figure—Cambridge's Central Square and features a variety of music (and dance), from rock bands like Morphine to Latin players like Babaloo—nine stages in all. With all that's going on here today I'm sure you'll find something you like...maybe even that recent Harvard graduate. For more information call 868-FAIR.

Indie Jones

Movie buffs take heed! Come to Phoenix Landing's indie film night (every other Monday) to watch the works of local filmmakers or to show your own independent project as long as it's 16mm, 8mm or on VHS. For more information call 491-1316. 512 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge.

Wonderlust

Stop by Brighton's Wonder Bar for the jazzy stylings of the Helen Sung Trio every Tuesday. The Wonder Bar—usually packed with BU trendoids from Wednesday night on—is serene and sociable on Tuesday evenings. Plus, this joint located on Harvard and Comm. Ave. has one of the best jukeboxes—filled with big names like Charlie "Bird" Parker, Stan Getz and Al Green.

Hot Sauce

Head to the House of Blues in Cambridge for the Afro-Latino Nights Tour featuring Ricardo Lemvo and Makina Loca with special guest Sam Mangwana. The music combines the high-spirited Cuban music son with booty shakin' Latin salsa and soukous. Sounds good to me.

Hot nights.

Hungry?

You better be for this event. The Chefs Collaborative 2000—a benefit to support local farmers—at Boston University's Peter Fuller Building will feature more than 40 local chefs preparing their finest, schmoozing and, what else, partying with patrons. Tickets are $40 for general admission and available at the door.

Mmmm Beer

Get a thirst and take a trip to Suffolk Downs where the Seventh Annual Boston Brewers Festival takes place from 8 pm to midnight. This year over 100 brewers will be on hand serving more than 400 styles of micro and craft brews. Tickets are $25 and available by calling Ticketmaster at 931-2000.

Have Harp Will Travel

With a recording career that spans nearly 45 years legendary harpist (that's a harmonica to those in the know) James Cotton heads to the Regattabar at the Charles Hotel to plug his new CD, Seems Like Yesterday—a compilation of unissued live recordings from 1967. This is a no-brainer.

After 45 years James Cotton is still going strong.

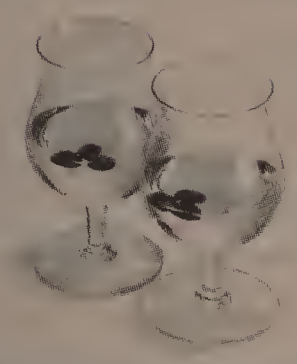
Time to Get Il

At Il Panino on Franklin Street (not to be confused with all the other Il Panino's out there in Beantown), Sunday night is the time to eat hearty and go party at International Night. The multileveled club offers food, drink and a dance floor to have some fun. Other nights might be fun at this spot, located at 295 Franklin Street, but Sunday night is the time to see all the beautiful people.

Counciling

Swing by the Harvard Film Archive at 24 Quincy Street in Cambridge for a viewing of director Richard Cohen's documentary titled Taylor's Campaign. In the film Ron Taylor—who is homeless—runs for city council in Santa Monica and along the way speaks out against the prejudice toward the poor and homeless. Tickets are $6 and the show starts at 7 pm.

Sinner



Now showing through July 3 is photographer George Holz's interpretation of the story of creation. Titled Original Sin Holz's 28 platinum prints can be seen at the Robert Klein Gallery (38 Newbury) and offer powerful imagery through seductive tension and nudity.

George Holz and his sins.

Borders Proudly Presents

JOHN IRVING

Thursday, June 11 • 6pm

Jacket design: Honi Werner

"Richly comic, as well as deeply disturbing, A Widow for One Year (Random House) is a multilayered love story of astonishing emotional force. Both ribald and erotic, it is also a brilliant novel about the passage of time and the relentlessness of grief." Borders welcomes John Irving for a reading on June 11 at 6pm. There will be a limited number of pre-signed copies available the day of the event on a first come, first served basis, one per customer.

NOTE Mr. Irving will not be autographing any books at this evening's event.

BORDERS COME INSIDE.

Recovery

The latest documentary from the Boston-based, Oscar winning filmmakers Margaret Lazarus and Renner Wunderlich—who won the GoldenBoy for Defending Our Lives—is Strong At The Broken Places: Turning Trauma into Recovery. Strong takes a look at the lives of four specific traumas, from the death camps of Cambodia to the violent streets of South Boston (pictured above), and how those lives were healed with self-determination and courage. Screenings of the film will be shown at the Museum of Fine Arts on June 10 at 7 pm and June 14 at 4 pm.

Dick Has Crabs

What better way to embrace fabulously warm weather than by popping over to Dick's Last Resort every Sunday, Monday and Tuesday from 4:30 pm to midnight for their Cape Cod Clambakes! For $14.95 you will enjoy a sassy sampling of lobster, clams or mussels, coupled with corn-on-the-cob and Dick's creamy "chowdah." For connoisseurs on a budget, Dick's can't be beat. As you take in the decidedly down-market ambiance, don't forget considering Dick's as your Sunday brunch destination of choice; their heavenly Gospel Brunch will recall not-so-fond memories of Sunday School whilst lifting your soul and stuffing your tummy with cheap eats.

Chocoholics Unite—Again!

It's almost impossible to contain a chocolate lover's bedazzled wonderment of a completely chocolate-imbued menu. To experience this phenomenon for yourself, head over to the Bristol Lounge at the Four Seasons Hotel and partake of the culinary masterpieces created by the London Four Seasons' Chef Deblonde. On May 20 Deblonde will premier an enticing array of goodies, including spicy chicken with chocolate and kumquats; spicy pineapple drinking chocolate; and the ever popular standby, chocolate truffles. The specially prepared menu is $20 per person; $27 with a glass of champagne. To be served through July as part of the Bristol's afternoon tea menu, it joins the 3 to 4:30 pm traditional English tea, which is $17.50 per person; $24.50 with a glass of bubbly.

Picnic in the Park

The Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel is launching its Summer in the City weekend packages this Memorial Day weekend. Four unique packages are tailored to the needs of lovers, families and friends. A favorite is the Family Picnic in the Park Weekend. It features one night's deluxe accommodations in a suite, breakfast for four (two adults/two children) at Copley's Grand Café, a welcome milk & cookies reception for children, and a complimentary copy of Kidding Around Boston. This family getaway also includes swan boat rides followed by a gourmet picnic lunch for four complete with checkered cloth to enjoy in the Public Garden. The rate for the weekend is $369; reservations and information regarding other packages may be gleaned by calling 267-5300.

BY BETSY SHERMAN

★ Don't Bother
★★ Fair
★★★ Good
★★★★ Terrific

The Butcher Boy ★★★★
There may not be a better movie released this year than this Irish tragicomedy directed by Neil Jordan. Newcomer Eamonn Owen is unforgettable as twelve-year-old Frankie, the troubled terror of his town. Stephen Rae gives two great performances. His narration as the adult Frankie is wry and dry, in counterpoint to the feverish action we see on screen. He also plays Frankie's abusive, alcoholic father whose dark madness may have been passed on to his son. Jordan orchestrates a variety of tones with utter confidence, and creates a bold form of Irish magical realism. The film is adapted from a novel by Patrick McCabe, who co-scripted with Jordan.

Lina Sivio in The North End.

Clockwatchers ★★★1/2
There's a lot of truth in this office comedy by first-timer Jill Sprecher (co-written with her sister Karen). It will be especially savored by anyone who has ever been appalled to hear the words "I'm just a temp" come out of her own mouth (those were the worst two years of my life). Great performances by the ensemble who play temp workers at a sterile financial company in Anycity USA. Toni Collette (Muriel's Wedding) is shy Iris, from whose point of view we observe. Lisa Kudrow is Paula, who deludes herself she's temping until her big break comes as an actress. Alanna Ubach is hilarious as the prim Jane, confident that her impending marriage will make her life blossom. The motor is Parker Posey as the dynamo Margaret; the always witty and invigorating Posey skillfully reveals the insecurities beneath Margaret's bombast. She puts the temp paradox—how limited responsibility can be both exhilarating and depressing—into words: "Do you ever feel like you're floating?"

Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas ★★1/2
With sumptuous art direction and morphing effects, Terry Gilliam turns Hunter S. Thompson's drug-addled 1971 story into a science fair of mutating setpieces. Passing through these period grotesqueries are Thompson alter-ego Raoul Duke, a journalist on assignment in Vegas, and lawyer Dr. Gonzo, keeper of the drug arsenal. Most of the film finds the fellas turning their hotel rooms into primal ooze or infiltrating the city's arenas of leisure (the Silent Majority finds solace in Debbie Reynolds and Perry Como, as Hendrix music blares from without). Del Toro's performance as the raging walrus-man Gonzo is surprisingly (considering his mumblefest in The Usual Suspects) immediate and winning. Distressingly, it's the usually great Johnny Depp who's flat here, getting caught up in a cartoon imitation of Thompson. We're always aware that it's Depp's babyface beneath the hat, bald pate and everpresent cigarette holder. And with merely a disguised movie star at the center of the film, Fear and Loathing feels declawed.

The Last Days of Disco ★★★1/2
Director-writer Whit Stillman created a preppie-roundelay genre with Metropolitan and Barcelona. If you liked the verbal adrenalin and arcane character shadings in those films, you'll be fond of this one, set in the early '80s among twentysomethings who frequent the hot disco of the moment. The aspiring book editors played by Chloe Sevigny and Kate Beckinsale come across a formula for bestsellers: sympathetic characters with big problems. Stillman's amusing wink is to transgress this formula, acknowledging he never expects to have a hit movie. Minutia reigns, and the question isn't whether the characters have flaws, but how deep they run. The women, recent Hampshire College grads, penetrate Manhattan nightlife with an older group of Harvard buddies. Stillman hits an odd, addictive mixture of spot-on realism and extravagant soap opera. Beckinsale proves herself a quintessential Stillman antagonist as the acidic Charlotte.

The North End ★★★
Reward yourself, and support local filmmaking, by going to the Showcase Revere for the exclusive run of Frank Ciota's comic drama set in Boston's picturesque Italian enclave. At the forefront is a pair of Harvard grads (Freddie, who has roots in the community, and his Irish buddy Mac) with an interest in neighborhood girl Danielle. Matthew Del Negro gives a strong performance as Freddie, who becomes alarmed when Mac's possessiveness of Danielle leads to violent outbursts against her. Colorful character actor Frank Vincent (who got beaten to death and stuffed in a trunk in Goodfellas) is marvelous as local hero Dom, who holds court over espresso and cigars in a cafe. Dom and his cronies serve as a Greek chorus of Old World wisdom and folly. Aspiring filmmaker Freddie's documentary about how gentrification is changing the North End punctuates the drama (one confused yuppie muses "My name's not Stu Katz").

tion's work to make the world a happier place for all. The June 9 event will begin at 6 pm and is being held at the Boston Center for the Arts. Tickets are $25 per person and available at the South End's Mike's Movies and We Think the World of You bookstore; they will be available for $30 the day of the event. Those in attendance will be privy to sampling culinary creations from 25 of Boston's finest restaurants, including Hamersley's Bistro, the Claremont Cafe and the Franklin Cafe. Call (781) 455-1972 for more information.

Un Vin Merveilleux

Every Saturday join the knowledgeable staff of the Brookline Liquor Mart for their wine tasting series. Accompanied by Chef Odette Bery's cheese and food samples, the 1-5 pm event is free and open to the public. June 6 will provide tasters with the wines of Italy, including Tuscany (Chianti), the Piedmont (Barolo) and many other regions; the Syrah grape is showcased in a variety of styles from the Rhone, Australia, California and other vineyard areas on June 13. While there, take advantage of the special 20 percent discount offered on all wines featured in the tasting. Call 734-7700 for more information.

Cheers, Cheers, Thanks A Lot!

Harvard Square's Café Celador was recently mentioned in Restaurants & Institutions magazine. Cited was the strong mystique of European cuisine and how it appeals to American chefs for ingredients and inspiration. Café Celador chef and owner Patrick Noé was one of the few chefs mentioned—and for good reason. His restaurant's southern French cuisine is influenced by a northern Mediterranean twist. Join Noé on June 13 as he presents a food demonstration at Williams Sonoma in Copley Place from noon to 2 pm. The dish du jour is a pan-seared duck confit ravioli in a mushroom ragout drizzled with truffle oil. Call 262-3080 for more information.

Good & Plentiful

Chef Noé will be one of restaurateurs taking part in the Chefs Collaborative 2000 "No Frills" fund-raiser at Boston University's Peter Fuller Building (808 Commonwealth Ave.) on June 11. The 6 to 10 pm event will bring together more than 40 local chefs in a benefit to support Chefs Collaborative 2000, an organization committed to developing educational programs for children, strengthening farmer/chef connections and providing wholesome food by emphasizing locally grown, seasonally fresh food in member chefs' restaurants. Tickets are available at the door and cost $40 (children under 16 are admitted free). A special $100 backstage pass is also available—it permits attendees the opportunity to meet with chefs beforehand and includes an autographed apron and raffle ticket. "No Frills" chefs include Chris Schlesinger of the East Coast Grill; Ana Sortun of Casablanca and Steve Johnson of the Blue Room. For advance ticket purchases, make checks payable to the Chefs Collaborative 2000 for $40 per person and send to: Chefs Collaborative, P.O. Box 380493, Cambridge, MA 02138. Requests and payments for VIP passes must be made in advance. Receipt of payment will be acknowledged by mail.

Improper IMPERSONALS

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. That's why we have the Improper Impersonals, a column written by you, the reader. Send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And it's free! Pick up a pen and tell that babe on the T you like his butt by writing to Improper Impersonals, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, 75 Arlington Street, 9th Floor Boston, MA 02116, fax: (617) 859-1446 or e-mail us at editor@improper.com. Recent correspondence follows.

To Mel/Mal at Sonsie 5/16
You were with a friend in a blue dress.
I gave you my space at the bar to order a martini on the rocks. You looked so hot in your little black dress with your long, brown hair flowing over your shoulders. Why didn't I ask for your number? You work for a large pharmaceutical company (M*), and you cover the Metrowest territory including my town. That's all I know about the angel in the black dress. I want to know more. Can anyone help me? She lives near Sonsie. E-mail: vetster123@aol.com.
LOOKING FOR YOU

Fritware Toxin Squirrel
I really admire your success in quitting caffeine; despite my loathing of medicines and chemicals, I can't give up coffee no matter how hard I try. Not that I've tried—I get the shakes even thinking about quitting. Anyway, it just goes to prove what I've always known about you, from the first moment we met: You are the coolest guy ever.
YOUR ADORING KITTIE

Homme a Pied
You missed your chance, for, alas, I depart for the West in early June. Who knew my commute was attracting such attention? As to what distracts me, it might be the lack of courage of a certain tall, thoughtful, blond gentleman—or I might just have an innate interest in paving stones or a rich fantasy life. Next time, bite the bullet and introduce yourself—propriety be damned.
HARVARD SQUARE PEDESTRIENNE

To "Taken as Well"...My Favorite Vinny Pays Up (Almost)
So you were taken as well? It appears you are correct, "No one is safe." But, alas, render unto Caesar what is his. And render this Shylock to me what is mine. For I have been paid in full, not by the Vin-Man, but by his dear infirm mother who endured much emotional AGONY secondary to a subpoena being served upon her "Favorite Vinny." Pathetic that mommy has to make good on a son's debt, especially when the son is almost two score in age.

This Shylock does not care for Favorite Mommy, Favorite Vinny or Favorite Family. As a Shylock, it matters not who pays the debt. It matters that the debt is paid in full. Some say the worst vice is advice, especially when unsolicited. None the less, I offer this advice to thee—every dog has his day. If you have a paper trail then you can easily collect the debt with the help of the courts. For that is this Shylock's modus operandi. Favorite Mommy is mortified of a bench warrant for Favorite Vinny's arrest. Feed off of that "Favorite Fear"—he is a slight man and me thinks he would fair poorly in jail. Still, this Shylock plans applying a "Badda Boom, Badda Bing" when he is no longer wanted in LA and is forced back to the Commonwealth for personal satisfaction. Best of luck with your quest, "TAKEN AS WELL."
THE SATISFIED SHYLOCK

The fact that you are back in Boston is a dream come true. I hope you call me again because the four months last year was not even close to being enough time with you.
JS

To the Nordic Goddess on the MV Ferry Last July
I was out on the deck in 10-foot seas, trying to cope with seasickness when, like a vision from Asgard, you appeared. As the wind played in your golden hair, as the lightning swam in your deep blue eyes, and Valkyries sang odes to your magnificence, you took your place at the railing beside me. My nausea vanished and my long-frozen heart began to stir. Then, as the gods began to howl in a cruel mockery of all that is sacred, you lips peeled back in agony and you puked like I have never seen a human being puke before: A cylinder of vomit roared out of your mouth like a Japanese bullet train from a tunnel. Then a gust of wind caught de ejecta and blew it back across the deck and hull in a Pollock-esque nightmare. My nausea returned. I don't remember anything after that, but although it is a moment I will take with me to my grave, I vow to seek you out, in the hope that your astounding pulchritude can salve my seared brain matter, and I can once again bask in your stormy beauty even as I fear your abdominal thunder.
SHAKEN, YET STIRRED

Dawn-y
I wish things could have been different between us, and all the turmoil was left out of the picture. But I guess with you moving and with me being silly our relationship was bound to sail away. I just want to wish you the best of luck in CO and to tell you that a friend for life has been made—me. If you ever need anything or if you just want to talk, then I am always here for you. Please do me a favor and take care of yourself and stay happy and weird—just like how I met you.
ME

To the Annoying Woman at the Movie
I hate you. Your voice pierces the hidden hatred well of my soul and makes me want to huck Junior Mints at you for an eternity...one by one, Junior Mints hitting all parts of your body. Think about it. I want to pour gallons of cherry-flavored slushies down your icky back. Why do you talk so much? What possesses you to be that way in a movie theater? Is it because you are inconsiderate? Yes. Is it because your parents talked during the movies? Probably. Will I make it my job to pelt you with anything I can get my hands on if I ever see—or hear—you in a theater again? Absolutely. Oh and by the way, that wasn't a leak in the air conditioner like you thought...that was spit, baby. Pure spit...mixed with just a little Junior Mint residue.

HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

JUNE 3 - JUNE 16, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Get the money, honey. Go directly to "Go" and collect what's due while Mercury meets your Mars ruler in your money house. There may be more than one route to your windfall, but if you opt for originality, the electronic media or scientific inquiry, then you'll cash in on the career benefits coming when Mars trines Uranus in the middle of next week. Don't mess up this brilliant scenario by adding a romantic element—the thrill of the chase—to what is basically a matter-of-fact matter.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Money, more like electronic transfers, changes hands when Mercury and Mars merge in some Bulls' money house on Friday. Keep an eye on ATM action. Saturn makes his first foray into your sign Tuesday and you're liable to feel on edge or slightly anxious about what that ole' devil planet has in mind. Saturn advances as far as 3+ Taurus before turning retrograde in August, so only those born near the Aries cusp will feel the weight. All of you can fall in lust when your Venus ruler squares erotic Uranus next Tuesday. Hot stuff, but dangerous, too.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

A major week for getting to the heart of a matter close to your heart, for finding the words that nail your feelings. Breakthrough ideas while your Mercury ruler aligns with inventive Uranus this weekend. You know you're clever enough, but right now you can be fuckin' brilliant. However, don't become so taken with yourself that you neglect the usual sources of inspiration. When the sun and Mercury meet in Gemini next Wednesday, there's no telling what marvelous mental gyrations you can pull off, what ideal solutions you can come up with.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

The target this week is changeable Uranus in Aquarius, which is either in your house of partners or the resources you share. Perhaps a group of casual friends need you to gain access to something new, maybe a client or a parent will question the nature of your partnership. Meanwhile you can experience the joy of clarity once the sun and Mercury meet during the full moon. Although you may opt to remain behind the scenes, instead of on center stage, for a nice change, you'll have a handle on an on-again, off-again relationship.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

All paths point to a change, either in your job description, co-workers or business partners. If you're in the middle of a divorce (and with erratic Uranus in your marriage house, why not?), you could also change lawyers in midstream. An instant attraction, like a thunderbolt out of the blue, can disrupt the best-laid plans, but if you don't act on your curiosity, then you'll kick yourself later. This full moon is meant for pure fun, an education or entertainment project and at least one well-worded career move. Gather your notes.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Like Gemini, you're in the midst of perhaps the most communicative and creative period of the year. It's not merely that your Mercury ruler, provocative Mars and the sun are all in your Gemini midheaven, dispensing (and attracting) wisdom, wit and clients who appreciate both. There's rebellious Uranus in your house of pleasures giving permission to be more reckless, to have fun purely for fun's sake, to be strange and entertaining. You also get zapped, intellectually speaking, when the sun and Mercury meet midweek. Breakthrough, breakthough.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

If you looked for financial aid (like I advised) then, as potent planetary forces illuminate your house of other people's money, you could be staring your benefactor in the face. But you can also look a little further, so that when the lights really go off—full moon in Gemini-Sag, sun-Mercury conjunction midweek—the results can be even more fruitful. Gemini is so supportive of Libra's intentions, it's worth the effort to nail down a promise and get the paperwork (a Gemini specialty) in order.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Do the research. Let your fingers do the walking through the yellow pages, the databases—whatever sources will give you the information you need. Versatility and mobility are not the usual Scorpionic fare, but while your Mars co-ruler is in Gemini (and Pluto, the other co-ruler is in Sag, another sign that moves around a lot), take advantage and split. An unusual situation at home doesn't have to make you nuts; use the weirdness to resolve a partnership matter, communicate more effectively with the world at large, or have a short-lived erotic interlude.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Everything now points to a partnership and how it affects your finances. Problems might stem from a reckless, albeit expensive, romance; a destructive desire to rock the boat; or a spontaneous, inexplicable urge to spoil the kid rotten. But anything based on promotions, sales, radio/TV or the publishable word increases your profitability and, because the full moon is in Sagittarius, your position in the public's eye. At the moment, your partner is brainier and better-read than you, so let him or her take the lead.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

You, more than most, could feel wobbly and confused when your Saturn ruler switches from Aries to Taurus early in the week. December Goats will be rewarded for hanging in there, being patient and keeping your vitriol to yourself. It's a good time to make plans about real estate ventures, or at least to think about where you want to be when Saturn trines your natal sun (anytime between now and 2001). This, as our Martha says, is a good thing; it's also a family farm, ornamental fowl kind of thing.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Your Uranus ruler is in the spotlight this week, so any changes that you want to make will go down fairly easily. Except for your love life—too erratic and public. Otherwise, you can use your wits and curiosity to enhance your stature and broaden your mind. Take off on an adventure or trip out amid all the comforts of home, go where you've never been (on the Net), learn a language, devour an author or topic of interest. You can truly put mind over matter while you're being led by your brain, for a change, instead of some other body part.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Open the windows wide and let the easily adaptable ideas from the airy Gemini influence blow in. The house, the relatives, even the neighbors can affect your take on the way things are, or after the full moon midweek, were. Change is in the air, and if you resist, you may regret it. Nonetheless, this full moon can make you inexplicably nervous, anxious to go somewhere, yet wary of your destination. I would take a tranq and let the changes that are coming down roll off my back. That's called progress.

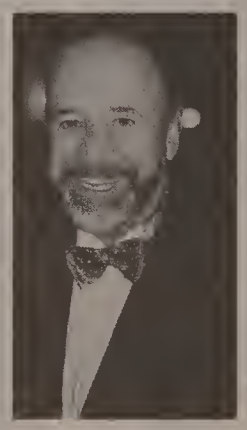
POP QUIZ

Which of the following fund-raisers of questionable taste actually took place recently?



A) a designer show house to raise money for the homeless.

B) a Pin-the-Tail-on-the-Donkey contest at the Carroll School for the Blind.

C) a celebrity chef dinner at Aujourd'hui to benefit the Harvard Eating Disorders Center.

Answer at bottom.

PUBLIC DRUNKENNESS

"Free to All" may be the motto of the Boston Public Library, but to attend the black-tie gala marking its 150th anniversary, guests shelled out $1,000 or $1,500 for the pleasure of sipping cocktails in the newly restored Bates Reading Room and then heading across Dartmouth Street for an elegant dinner underneath a tent constructed in Copley Square.

Among the guests were library benefactors Vivian and Lionel Spiro and John and Diddy Cullinane, philanthroposaurus Rex David Mugar, Channel 5 GM Paul LaCamera and his wife, Mimi, Boston Foundation head Anna Faith Jones, NFL Napoleon Bob Kraft and the Empress Myra, Houghton Mifflin chief Nader Darehshori, the relentlessly social Steve and Roberta Weiner, BSO chief Mark Volpe and his wife, Martha, US Poet Laureate Robert Pinsky, Pulitzer prize-winner David Halberstam, Boston Book Review co-founder Kiril Alexandrov and countless others, one of whom swallowed several glasses of wine and observed, "This has gotta be the fanciest group that ever tied one on in the middle of Copley Square."

IF THE BOUFFANT FITS, WEAR IT

For those of you who don't parlez vous, the Alliance Francaise's Bal du Printemps, Bal du Centenaire translates roughly as "Spring Hoedown, Hootenanny of the Century."

In any case, it was held in the ballroom of the Park Plaza Hotel, with free-flowing champagne, an elaborate dinner, a laser light show and lots of good-looking, well-dressed people, including French ambassador to the US Francois Bujon de l'Estang, Gallic funboy Pascal Aguirre de Navarre and his fetching fiancee, Irina Lutskaya, clotheshorse Nan Wetherhorn of the French Library, Boston Capital president Richard DeAgozio, thoroughbred party girl Cynthia Frederick (who sells shares in racehorse syndicates for Centennial Farms), her madcap sister Jenn Dwight with the debonair John Phipps, interior designer Kent Hammond Keatinge, European aristocrats Miguel and Barbara de Braganca and one woman who complained, "My hair's so curly, I look like a French poodle." "Well," her friend pointed out, "at least you're at the right event."

HAVE CASH, WILL PUBLISH

As always, the Steppingstone Foundation's annual Spring Swing was an evening of sophisticated debauchery that attracted a glittering crew to the Boston Ballet's South End studios, among them: the dazzling Alys Creighton accompanied by her affable other half, Peter, velvet voiced Wendy Goldstein and her beau, Computer Chip Pierce, the supernaturally sweet Beezee Honan and husband Tom, financial mack-daddy Peter Monaco, paintings peddler Anja Kola and her stockbroker husband, Kier, and the achingly lovely Imelda Monaghan with her brother, Cape Cod bad-boy Liam.

By far the most fabulous guest, however, was blonde bombshell Shelley Morse of Putnam Investments, who was the high bidder in the silent auction for the dubious distinction of being mentioned in this column.

Not only did she have the prettiest dress, the best shoes, the most dazzling smile and the most perfect hairdo; she's also a nationally ranked paddle-tennis player and, all-around, the most wonderful, intelligent and fascinating person who attended the party—an opinion that has absolutely nothing to do with the fact that she paid $200 to have me say so. Really. I mean it.

REMEMBER WHY DISCO DIED

The opening night of Bring in 'da Noise, Bring in 'da Funk—a benefit for the Boys and Girls Clubs of Boston—could have been called Bring in 'da Electrician, Bring in Boston Edison.

Although the show itself went off without a hitch at the Shubert, both the pre- and post-parties were supposed to take place in the lobby of the Wang Center, where there was a power outage.

The festivities were forced next door, to the less marble, more linoleum lobby of the New England Medical Center, but no one seemed to mind, probably because of such congenial company as the outgoing and irreplaceable Frances Moseley and her husband, Bud, anchor babe Liz Walker, the ever-resourceful Jill Goldweitz, Lauren Bacall look-alike Pam Humphrey, car czar Bob Brest with Woolf matriarch Ann and her offspring Tiffany, Gary and Diane, shameless schmoozemeister BMaynard Scarborough and the eternally sunny Robin Glover, unfairly handsome hairdresser Jim Peltier and his girlfriend Cynthia Sanchez, to whom I owe a birthday drink, and Wang Center CEO Josiah Spaulding Jr., who made up for the electrical glitch and provided the second most entertaining performance of the evening by dancing with his mother, social icon and Jackie O bridesmaid Helen, to a cover of KC and the Sunshine Band's "Do a Little Dance, Make a Little Love, Get Down Tonight." ✦

Pop Quiz Answer: C

Night Fever

Joshua Resnek's weak depiction of a Boston harlot ("Queen of the Night", June 3), who, if you ask me was nothing more than a make-believe regurgitation of Julia Roberts in Pretty Woman, was full of, no pun intended, tough issues to swallow. One, no professional prostitute, I don't care how overworked your thighs are or how envious you are of Heidi Fleiss, would ever refuse $500,000 to sleep with one client for a year. Demi Moore got $1 million for a night in Indecent Proposal, but that's just a movie. Any smart hooker would take the half mil for a year, and then retreat back to screwing an array of executives, pulling in more dough annually than the President of the United States. Actually, Bill Clinton is kind of like a whore, isn't he? Minus the lucrative paycheck. Two, Emma, the notorious hussy said that she slept with 25 guys at Brown University, but she wasn't "promiscuous." Who taught her the definition of "promiscuous"? Wilt Chamberlain? Sounds like she got more ass than a toilet. Three, the story never indicated how I could contact her.

JOSH MITCHELL
South Boston

I just read your June 3 issue. The "Queen of the Night" article deserves special mention. Why? Because it managed to take a subject that could have been interesting, dark or funny and make it dull! Yeah so "Emma" charges a lot, keeps a secret and gets a lot of money. That was about all there was to the article. That and listing the affluent neighborhoods her clients were in and the fact that most of them were married. So? There were so many ways the article could have been better.

1) What was the strangest thing she has been asked to do and how much did it cost?
2) What has she refused to do and why?
3) What has she been asked to do the most, on average?
4) Are all her clients men?
5) What gave her the idea to do this?
6) How does she ensure her safety?
7) How do her potential clients find her?
8) With the kind of fees she charges, how does she go about getting paid?
9) What form of payment (i.e., money orders, etc.)?

There are many more interesting points, etc., but I'm sure you now get the idea. The article is so vague, aside from naming neighborhoods, one could almost suspect it was a half-assed work of fiction.

Grin and bare it!

That's what this cast of characters did for THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's nude-not-lewd-with-food, first-ever Bare Basics Guide to Summer Patio Dining.

Photographer Rob van Petten shot from dawn to dusk in preparation of this issue's au naturel cover. Known both in Boston and New York for his arresting approach to fashion, van Petten rose to the occasion, capturing THE IMPROPER's cast of familiar Boston*ian* faces. Included were the alluring foursome from Faneuil Hall's "Babe-Shack" The Rack: Shannon, Angie, Stephanie and Erica proving that "The Rack is still intact." Special thanks to owner, Paul Barclay, for allowing us the pleasure of his staff's company for two fun-filled days.

Erica and Rob van Petten

Thanks also to our other models: the very foxy Dionne, and dancer-by-day, graphic-artist-by-night Nathalie (who's keeping her day job). The sensitive but not-so-shy Anthony and the real-life Ken, Ken Hanlon. These nude-food-dudes helped us shun the heat by shunning their clothes for our, um, novel naked cover concept, both courtesy of Maggie, Inc. Thanks also to models Sean (a.k.a., Lobster Boy), computer research scientist...yes, scientist! cum model, Olivier, (who ever said models were stupid?) and in-line skate master John Gilmour of MADD Snowboards.

Upstairs at the Pudding, housed in the oldest undergraduate club in the nation, is co-owned by the ultra accommodating Mary-Catherine Deibel and Deborah Hughes, who provided the perfect verdant backdrop for our Bare Dining, replete with its weeping herbs and sampling of paint-box wildflowers dripping in all the right places.

Jack Foley and Elizabeth Thrasher

Others we couldn't bare not to thank include; "best buddy" Jack Foley, The Colonnade Hotel for providing towel coverage; make-up by "cosmic" Angela and Ray, hair by COCO at Jean Pierre David, and MOTOPHOTO for their special attention to our last-minute needs. ✦

Senator Bulger: He was next.

CALL IT BOSTON SERENDIPITY

Boston mobster Whitey Bulger was, for decades, a paid FBI informant. Whitey's patron inside the FBI was former Supervisory Special Agent John Morris. In the early 1970s, Morris led the investigation into a massive corruption scandal known as MBM (for the name of the contractors who were bribed). The scandal led to the downfall, one by one, of the three top politicians in the state senate, two of whom went to jail. Their departure cleared the way for the person next in line, who became Senate President, the most powerful position in the state, for 17 years. His name was Billy Bulger, Whitey's brother.

WHAT WOULD YOU CALL MICHAEL SHERLOCK'S IF MICHAEL SHERLOCK WEREN'T THERE?

Pub-man Michael Sherlock is set for a fight at the 99 Broad St.

Is Sherlock history?

club that bears his name. Co-owners Liam and Susan Tiernan, said Sherlock, last week gave him 48 hours to consider a buyout offer. He said he turned it down because it wasn't enough. "I'm not going," said Sherlock, who's been around for 20 years, managing first the Black Rose then Limericks, Midnight Court and Dooley's Tavern.

FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF INTERN-AL AFFAIRS

Everyone knows that lots of people doubt President Clinton's account du jour and those that preceded it in l'affaire Lewinsky. Lots of Floridians, Texans, Bostonians, Nigerians, Indonesians, Republicans and, yes, Democrats, too. So, what's the big deal about a poll that confirmed as much? For some reason, the poll result—that 35 percent of local Democrats doubt the President's story about Monica—was splayed across the Herald's June 5 front page as if it were news. Maybe there just wasn't anything new that day. Maybe it was because the Herald wanted to twit the First Couple who, uh, coincidentally, were in town delivering commencement wisdom at Harvard and MIT. Or maybe they just wanted to get noticed by the bigfoot press corps who came to town in tow.

BUT DID THEY GIVE HIM A LOLLIPOP?

Imagine their surprise, as the kids in the X-ray ward at Children's Hospital watched the huge mustachioed grown-up, sporting a baseball uniform, no less, walk in. Boys will be boys but this fellow looked a bit over Children's patient-age limit of 21. Indeed, it was fabled Mets player Mike Piazza, hit by a Pedro Martinez pitch at Fenway. Piazza wound up at Children's because that's the radiology department of choice for Sox team physician George Pappas, who has privileges there. Piazza's arrival caused a pleasant stir throughout the ward, cheering even young Sox fans. Before he left, the Mets star signed one young fan's cast. And, oh yes, while Piazza was only bruised in the June 5 game, the Sox were crushed, 9-2.

GOOD THINGS IN SMALL PACKAGES

Fundraisers at Faulkner Hospital got a big boost from Whitney Houston, who donated the gown she wore in her Greatest Love of All music video to the recent auction to benefit the Faulkner-Sagoff Centre's breast care services. The gift was secured by benefit chairman Randi Biren, whose father, Dan Gittelman, was once Houston's manager. The lucky bidder, who wanted anonymity, paid $4500 for the dress his girlfriend will wear. At least we hope she will. It's a size 4.

COUNTING HIS BEANS

Three years ago, Rob Kean of Winchester got bored with his job as an accountant at Deloitte & Touche and began to write a book about life in a college fraternity, based in part on his years at Bowdoin. In February, Warner Books bought the rights to The Pledge and Kean, 28, quit his day job. Now Polygram has purchased the screen rights, for more than $100,000, with incentives and bonuses said to be worth a million. Warner and Polygram also secured the rights to Kean's next book, due out in July 1999.

OUR SMART FRONT

Four months ago, THE IMPROPER cover story broke the news that the Navy was considering allowing Old Ironsides to travel to other ports this summer, despite expert advice against the move. After much hue, cry and backroom wrangling, Navy brass last week said the venerable ship will stay near its home berth in Charlestown. Meanwhile, as reported here last issue, IMPROPER two-time cover gal Pattie Maes of MIT was just awarded tenure. Now, not to be outdone, Maes' cover-model partner on our internet issue last fall, Tim Berners-Lee of

Tim Berners-Lee

MIT, was just awarded a $270,000 MacArthur "genius" grant. (It may also have had something to do with his inventing the World Wide Web.)

MOVEABLE FEASTS

Jim Casey, executive chef of 29 Newbury, is taking over the food-helm at Back Bay Brewing Company on Boylston Street. His successor at 29 is Kendall Brenner, who comes from private and corporate executive chef posts in New York. And 575, the sushi bar/pub at 575 Mass. Ave. is closed–yet again. Two years ago, the site was transformed after much ballyhoo by new owner Kevin Troy from the veteran Newbury Street Steakhouse to the Café Mojo. After a short tenure, the place closed, to reopen as 575, featuring an Asian menu. Details of the latest incarnation are under wraps.

KEEPER OF THE FAME

Boston television personalities Tom Ellis (center), New England Cable News anchor, and Dixie Whatley (right), WCVB entertainment reporter, help celebrate the recent 80th birthday of Mary Kowalski, the person who really is the power at p.r. firm Regan Communications. Kowalski, founder George Regan's aunt, has been the bookkeeper at Regan's public relations firm since its inception in 1984. And anyone who knows George knows the devil and his details are in those books. ✦

Bewitched, Bothered And Rather Buddhist

Globe columnist Linda Weltner brings together a collection of candid pieces about her near and dear in her book Family Puzzles: A Private Life Made Public ($13.95 paperback).

AS 16 YEARS HAVE UNROLLED IN LINDA WELTNER'S life, so has an array of amazingly brave, open-hearted, open-psyched columns about her family. Feuds, deaths (not the least of them her beloved dog), deep friendships (one ending in a painful "divorce"), reconciliations, illnesses and marriages have come out on the weekly ticker tape. Weltner, the mother of teenagers when her column began, is now a grandmother.

While Weltner's stories are domestic, no one could deny that she lives her family life as an adventure, experiencing woe to the same degree as she embraces the countervailing joy, insight and the aha experience.

The chapters are divided according to her roles as wife, mother, sister and so forth, and there is barbed wire in each relationship and each column. But what makes reading Weltner so compelling is that she manages to untwist that wire within a short space. After giving herself, and perhaps some others, a hard time, the therapeutic effect may come from taking a longer perspective. Weltner really learns from the thunder that rolls down the generations, examining her skewed assumptions. Or her perspective may come from meditation or from a meaningful conversation with a friend. In like a lion, Weltner takes us on a cliff-hanging ride, working out her self-divisions on paper, landing on a peaceful conclusion. ✦

Yoga-Bye Baby

Portia Brockway's six-week course in yoga for pregnant women runs all year for $90. Christ Church, Zero Garden Street, Cambridge; 492-6873.

PREGNANT WOMEN NEED EXERCISE, BUT THE CHUGging and sweating that characterize life in the gym aren't quite what the baby-doctor ordered, at least into those bulging trimesters. But yoga is different, and Portia Brockway has the philosophy, the lulling magic voice and the peaceful setting at Christ Church in Cambridge in which to offer the non-laborious grace and ease of the ancient exercise.

She calls this pure-white room with its arched windows and rounded ceilings "a sacred space," but she means something that goes beyond its churchliness. Her classes encourage moments of communion with the baby. The mothers-to-be lie on their sides and do exercises that are not "belly-down," including the Cat, with its stretch and roundedness, and the Warrior Pose, for strength in the legs. Other squatting positions open the pelvis, and still others have women leaning against the wall.

In a soothingly inviting way, Brockway evokes images of each season ("the long tawny summer," "throwing the leaves up in the fall") during the Salute to the Child, while the mothers breathe, foreshadowing childbirth. "These women have a special vitality, they're serene and easy to be with," Brockway says. And indeed the class is dreamy-delicious. With the green Radcliffe yard beyond and beautiful New England houses just outside, the osmosis is auspicious for these lucky babies. ✦

Walk on the Earth, Indoors

What's good for nature is good for the floor, as these Imagine Tiles show. At Boston Tile Company, 25 McNeil Way, Dedham; 781-451-0406.

IN THE DEPARTMENT OF "WHY DIDN'T THEY THINK OF THIS before?" comes Imagine Tiles. Not plain colors and not merely patterns, these ceramic tiles have actual photographic images right on them. There are pictures of lusciously polished mixed stones, and there are crunchy-looking, satisfyingly true blue-gray river rocks. Following Mother Nature's random toss of the stones, these tiles come in three different rock arrangements so they look natural and not regimented.

Another tile style shows the sunlight dazzle off the blue waters of a swimming pool. Yet another pattern shows fallen autumnal leaves almost sepia-sad (unless you get the green ones). Or there's grass, second cousin to that grassy computer-screen background. Other styles—and these can be used on kitchen backsplashes—are super-red apples, curly pasta (how like pre-Raphaelite hair!) and bright chile peppers. Because they are so vivid and polished, their best use is for entryways, bathrooms and smaller areas needing a wow-making feature. Boston Tile also sells Warm Tiles that are heated from below, working on a thermostat, for those Calvinist bathrooms or rooms over the garage. ✦

CITY HAUL

SMELL YOU LATER

Oil of rose? No. Lilac juice? Think again. Odeur 53, the new fragrance by Comme des Garçons, has none of the usual concoctions that go into the big-market perfumes. Odeur 53 is held together with smells of a different, umm, nature. Like nail polish fumes, "flaming rock"—whatever that is—and, for the motorhead in you, burnt rubber. Billed as an "anti-fragrance," the strange brew, created by chemically reproducing 53 nonliving molecules—from sand dunes to, awww, how cute, babies' breath—is available now at the always trendy Riccardi on Newbury (a year's supply 6.5 fluid ounces costs $80) and soon at big-name retailers around Boston like Barneys New York, Matsu and Colonial Drug in Cambridge. Oddly enough, the eau de toilette has won the raves of many a fine-smelling female.

Lear, Lear

*Kudos to stage and screen actress Olympia Dukakis (Moonstruck, Steel Magnolias) for showing she has, well, as the Spice Girls would say, "girl power." The Academy Award winner stars in the woman-centered* Lear Project, an adaptation of Shakespeare's classic King Lear, at the Orpheum Theatre-Foxborough June 16-21. The Lear Project examines one woman's relationship with power, dynasty and bloodline, as well as commenting on the universal mother-daughter bond—which seems strong enough for Dukakis and her real-life daughter, Christina Zorich, who stars alongside her mom in the production. Tickets to the performance are $32.50 and are available by calling 888-ORPHEUM.

The Zoo Tour

Want to see wild animals capable of ripping you to shreds and then feasting on your carcass for days? Go to Boston's own Franklin Park Zoo. Want to see those same wild creatures a little closer and in their natural habitat? Then join Zoo New England president and CEO Brian Rutledge (who is sometimes called a cross between Crocodile Dundee and Indiana Jones) on a four-day safari to Zimbabwe. Departing New York July 18, the trek heads to Johannesburg, South Africa, Harare's Mukuvisi Woodlands and finally the Eastern Highlands in Nyanga. Safari-goers will sneak peeks at all sorts of exotic creatures, from lanner falcons to blue wildebeests.

All Aboard

The obsession with the ill-fated RMS Titanic doesn't seem to have abated. It isn't enough that throngs of prepubescent girls swoon over the star of James Cameron's take on the tragedy; now, Boston will join in the frenzy as it plays host to a collection of Titanic relics. Titanic: The Exhibition will make its Boston debut July 1 at the World Trade Center. The spectacle promises visitors the opportunity to experience the discovery and excavation of the ship through theatrical sights, sounds and educational displays that will illustrate the innovative technology used to explore the wreckage.

World Trade Center president John Drew is "intrigued by this exhibit because it is a tangible, accurate showcase of Titanic with a serious approach—one that embodies respect for her passengers and embraces the advances in science and technology that will allow the memory of Titanic to be preserved for generations."

To be housed in a 30,000-square-foot temporary structure, the exhibit will feature a re-creation of the Titanic wreck, with a replica of the ship surrounded by the actual salvage, arranged as it was found on the ocean floor. Sure draws include the bronze cherub from the ship's grand staircase and the silverware and fine china upon which the first class passengers' last 11-course meal was served.

—Krystian von Speidel

Clockwise from top: a gold and silver bracelet; a music stand made to be attached to a clarinet; ship's telegraph located on the stern, used to relay the order to the engine room to stop the engines, then run them full astern; unfortunately, it was too late to avoid the iceberg.

Beauty TRUTH

Beauty & Truth's own CIA has spent years prowling the strects in search of Boston's ultimate beauty services. The spies report: Most skin care salons and pedicure parlors are mediocre. And far too many arc shockingly bad. Loyal agents suffered in the clutches of Marathon Man pedicurists who left them with bleeding cuticles and over-razored soles. Pimple-picking aestheticians tortured our heroic investigators with facials that scarred and marred their skin. Bikini waxes burned or tore out the hide of more than one bold detectivc.

But we survived to tell this tale of the best beauty Beantown can offer:

GOLDEN ARCHES

Dad's day, treat Pops to the tops from Boston salons

If eyebrow plucking is a skill you lack, don't feel bad: It's tricky. Hand off the dirty deed to a skilled professional. The finest brow-trimmers are trained artists you can trust not to remove that one, precious hair that gives your brow line its attractive, Gillian Anderson uniformity. Bring photos of brow shapes you like to help illustratc your desire before you let the tweezers or wax near your golden arches.

Here are our fav masters of eyebrow maintenance: Ella, Irene and Nina of the 30 Newbury Day Spa may not be the best singing trio, but their fine-tuned brow bending wins high praise from the testers. Call them at 437-7775. For glamorous brows and a lesson in how to use an eye pencil properly, call 351-0020 for an appointment with Austin of M salon, 236 Clarendon Street. He can shape any brow to movie star perfection.

Sandra Curzi of Mario Russo Salon, at 9 Newbury Street, will forever be the favorite eyebrow editor for those who want very natural, low-maintenance brows. Groucho Marx-like men love her discreet reshaping; she is also one of the best aestheticians this side of Atlantis. Her knowledge and gentle touch when it comes to skin carc are unsurpassed. Call 424-6676 for an appointment.

Another aesthetician who has my testers' devotion is Rosaline, the Brookline skin care guru. Aftcr following their advice, I see why she has won numerous awards and a cultlike following. She has a magic touch with troubled skin, and her selection of skin care products is impeccable. Her flawless facials earn this gal from Grenada a spot in the Pia Hall of Facial Fame. Rosaline's Skin Care Clinic is located at 1426 Beacon Street, Brookline, two blocks from Coolidge Corner. Call 739-2392.

Bushwhacking

What could be more embarrassing than stripping down to a G-string and getting your overgrown bush waxed? Well, how about walking on a beach with blisters, cuts and red bumps, because some poorly trained weed-whacking waxer attacked your private garden. Entrust your purr box to what my testers call the hair removal specialists at Total Skin Care, Commonwealth Avenue. Call 566-7280.

And if your husband's back resembles a Tom Selleck welcome mat, treat him to a Father's Day mow from Total Skin Care. These wax wizards can turn Planet of the Apes shoulders hot-dog smooth faster than you can say, "I'll take that one, with relish!"

Vote With Your Feet

I truly believe that every sandal-stomping sexy should start the summer with at least one professional pedicure. Spend an hour at the foot spa, then maintain the perfection of your pavement-pounders yourself till Labor Day. And your feet deserve the pampering: After all, they let you walk all over them!

You'll feel like royalty when you're cooling on a thronelike pedicure chair. These babies have built-in whirlpools, vibra back massages and other bells and whistles. But without a skilled pedicurist, it's just another footstool. Two Boston beauty shops have the chairs and the talented tootsie ticklers to match. Josephine of Mitchell John Salon, at 67 Broad Street, is a swect lady who will surprise you with her mighty strength. This Little Old Woman Who Takes Off Your Shoes pumices away calluses without damaging the soles of your feet, and polishes your piggies to perfection. Call 951-0122 for an appointment. Or see Stella and Luba at 30 Newbury. These twin toe tappers will always be pedicure principals on Boston's foot fetish scene.

She might not work with one of those swanky chairs, but Robin Erb makes up for her lack of seating with the wisdom she brings to foot care. Her toenail shapings are the sexiest—and safe. This gal doesn't wimp out and use a razor when a strong pumice scraping can do just as good a job without damaging the bottoms of your feet. Find Robin at Vincent Cox Salon, 132 Newbury Street. Call 262-5111 for an appointment; she books up fast.

No matter what salon you go to, make sure your foot servicer has an immaculate work station. All tools must be sanitized, or, better yet, disposablc. Ask questions and remembcr: If your gut tells you that the person isn't qualified to scrape your soles, hit the road, Jack—and don't you come back no more.

Samantha Morton as Iris and Rita Tushingham as Mum

MOVIES

Under the Skin

By Betsy Sherman

Gritty Liverpool, a grieving daughter and some frank talk about sex

A TREND EMERGES already in 1998 film releases: Some of the most powerful movies on the international scene are being made in the U.K. and Ireland. There was Neil Jordan's howling Butcher Boy, Shane Meadows' stark look at depressed youth, Twenty-FourSeven, and now the stunningly intimate Under the Skin by newcomer Carine Adler.

Samantha Morton and Stuart Townsend

From the opening passages of Under the Skin, we can feel a total engagement on the part of the filmmaker, who really does put us into the skin of a Liverpool 19-year-old trying to cope with the death of her mother. Adler chose the perfect vehicle in actress Samantha Morton; as protagonist Iris, she lets loose a helter-skelter energy, yet always feels real.

The group of women characters that Adler places on screen are as unapologetically ordinary as those in the early films of Jane Campion (they're filmed with a home movie-style imperfectness by Barry Ackroyd, Ken Loach's cinematographer).

Iris' dry voice-over tells us how her mother loved roses, and named Iris' older sister Rose. The mother is played by Rita Tushingham—the '60s screen star who spanned kitchen-sink drama and Swingin' London comedies—and Rose by Claire Rushbrook, the petulant daughter in Secrets & Lies. Rose and Mum are wrapped up in Rose's pregnancy, leaving Iris craving attention. But the film's jumpy style prefigures the dizzyingly swift tragedy: Mum is diagnosed with a brain tumor, and dies within a few weeks (it's an extra shock that the skeletal, disoriented woman we see is Tushingham, one-time icon of youth).

Iris, numbed by the loss of her adored mother, gropes for an identity. Everything suddenly seems transient. She impulsively picks up a guy at the movies, and finds exultation and release in sex with a stranger.

She breaks up with her boyfriend, and moves into an apartment that appropriately looks more like a hotel room. She takes to wearing her mother's blond wig and short fur coat, with sunglasses and high-heel sandals. She picks up more men, but fixates on the first one, Tom (Stuart Townsend of Shooting Fish), and regales him with sexual fantasies on the phone.

Aside from her brief moments of contact with the parade of pub pick-ups, Iris drifts through the days. She wanders into a church as the choir practices, and longs to be part of something so exquisite. She goes so far as to audition, off-key (she finds a sort of salvation in song later on). She leaves her job in a lingerie shop and gets a drearier one at the subway system's lost-and-found center.

Amid the stockpiles of orphaned umbrellas and cell phones, she sees and hears her mother everywhere. Rose, wrapped up in her own worries, seems unavailable, and Iris alienates her even-tempered brother-in-law, Frank.

As Iris spirals downward, we expect that a turning point will come for her, but it's impossible to predict what that will be. Is Iris' reckless behavior a way of asserting herself or effacing herself? Writer-director Adler refrains from slamming a judgment on Iris.

The movie's grainy look, with a limited palette of acid-tinged colors, combines the gritty reality of Liverpool with an otherworldly quality (there's a nod to the dreamlike nature films of Jean Painlevé, as Iris watches his sea horses on TV). The film's evocative soundtrack also gets under our skin, and Iris' frank sex talk, in her confessional voice-overs, feels groundbreaking for Anglo-Saxon cinema.

All the performances are fine, with Morton coming through as remarkably poised and fearless. And in the vein of spirits coming back from the dead, Adler may well be the creative heir to the late Krzysztof Kieslowski. She exhibits the same sensitive-yet-tough handling of her characters, and a gift for crafting a film into a complete sensory experience. ✦

Complete Boredom Syndrome

Watching CBS's downward spiral

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE "Tiffany Network"? When I was a kid, CBS was the network to watch, and watch we did. Its prime time shows were unmatched. Recently a colleague and I were talking about network television in general and neither of us could come up with a single CBS prime time show off the top of our head. Finally, he remembered the now-canceled Murphy Brown.

The 1997-1998 TV season sweeps are a few weeks behind us, and CBS came in second, well ahead of ABC. But in the 18-to-49-year-old demographic, for which advertisers are most likely to pay premium prices, CBS is in a fight for fourth. Could it be that the network that brought us such classics as See It Now, I Love Lucy, Gunsmoke, The Dick Van Dyke Show, The Mary Tyler Moore Show, The Carol Burnett Show and Dallas can no longer create and produce innovative shows that are advertiser friendly?

The network's president, Leslie Moonves, told a group of advertisers and reporters that the network is "excited about its new season." I'm willing to have an open mind, but L.A. Docs sounds like something that would occur if the cast of L.A. Law collided with ER. It's not original. It smells lazy.

Advertisers are not revved up by the CBS of the late '90s. TV is a business. We see the programs we do because advertisers are paying the bills. The network's Thursday-night offerings—Diagnosis Murder, Promised Land and 48 Hours—make less for CBS in ad revenues than ER docs in one hour for NBC on the same evening.

That, says Betsy Frank, media guru at Saatchi & Saatchi Advertising in New York, is because big TV advertisers, like the movie studios, fast-food purveyors and soda makers, are looking for programming that appeals to a younger audience.

"The ones that spend a lot of money aren't buying the Diagnosis Murder crowd," Frank said. Each of the other networks, to varying degrees, has hip programming that's not only "must see" but "must hawk." In short, if you watch a show but don't buy the stuff in the ads, the shows will not stay on the air. The just-canceled Dr. Quinn, Medicine Woman had nearly twice the audience of Fox's Party of Five. Quinn watchers were deemed older. Party-ers are young. The Party goes on while the Medicine Woman retires. That's the law of advertising, one CBS seems to have forgotten.

Consider CBS's four top-rated regular shows of the just-finished season: Touched by an Angel; 60 Minutes; Walker, Texas Ranger and Diagnosis Murder. Beyond 60 Minutes, not one has a buzz about it or is doing anything different or daring. Angel is a rip-off of Highway to Heaven. Diagnosis Murder is Murder, She Wrote in a medical setting. And the less said about Chuck Norris' Kung-Fu-Meets-Dudley-Dooright act, the better. These all skew to older viewers. The riskier and more thought-provoking shows on the network ended up on the other end of the ratings scale.

Sure, the TV landscape has changed dramatically since the days Mary Richards worked at WJM. Cable, VCRs and the Internet all take viewers away from network programming. But if 76 million people can tune in to watch Seinfeld sign off, CBS can still make something happen. Advertisers have too many other options. ✦

Jon Anderson of Yes

MUSIC

YES

By Paul Robicheau

And, yes, they're coming to Harborlights at the end of the month

CLASSIC ROCK IS THE RODNEY Dangerfield of the music business, especially for old-school progressive outfits like Yes. But Yes singer-lyricist Jon Anderson shrugs off those who dismiss his veteran English band for its lengthy songs, celestial optimism and choirboy harmonies.

"They'll wake up one day," Anderson says of detractors, who might have been surprised by the group's impressive Orpheum concert last fall, and have another chance to experience Yes at Harborlights June 30.

"It's very hard for people to believe in hope, and believe in the future, and to believe in changes, love and peace," he says on the phone from his Los Angeles home. "There's a great [Nick Lowe] song by Elvis Costello, '(What's So Funny 'Bout) Peace, Love and Understanding.' And it's about time people just stopped bitching and got on with life, and enjoyed who we are, and came to see us. People criticize us, and never come to see us anyway."

Now is the best time in years to see Yes. The band's recent CD, Open Your Eyes, is just a glossy attempt at bridging the Yes sound of the '70s (when "Roundabout" was one hit) and the '80s (when "Owner of a Lonely Heart" was the other). But Yes was never about the Top 40. Keys To Ascension, a pair of double-CD sets documenting 1996 shows in California, found the group revitalizing epics from its grandiose glory days of the early '70s. Among them were the 20-minute suites "The Revealing Science of God," played at the Orpheum, and "Close To The Edge," on tap for Harborlights.

"We're not very good at having hit records and making great videos, or looking like the next jeans advert," Anderson chuckles. "That's not what we are. We're just very good musicians—unfortunately. Sorry."

The musicianship is anchored by the knotty virtuosity of melodic bassist Chris Squire—who co-founded Yes with Anderson in 1968—and Steve Howe, whose genre-splicing guitar work on electric, acoustic, pedal-steel and sitar brought another unique signature to the group's heyday.

"I think [Howe] kind of embodies what the band is all about," Anderson offers. "We do have very stylistic musicians in the band, but we're able to do music from 25 years ago that is still as important today. People don't quite understand that. I mean, fans do, but the general business and public don't even know what the band is, and don't have a clue until they see it."

People can also hear Yes in full-blown splendor this tour: the orchestral fusionists have added Surround Sound. "It's not something that somebody just brought in—we actually work with technicians and a Surround Sound mixer," Anderson says of the system with five speaker clusters, designed by Clair Brothers of Pennsylvania, which did quadraphonic sound for Yes in 1973 before working for the Rolling Stones and Michael Jackson.

We're just very good musicians – unfortunately. Sorry.

"If we want things to happen sound-wise, we have to perform them," Anderson says. "So it's a whole new ballgame in terms of stage production, and we've always been right at the edge of that."

Yes will be rounded out by longtime drummer Alan White, second guitarist Billy Sherwood (who has helped in writing and producing the band's latest CDs) and Boston-based keyboardist Igor Khoroshev, who guested on Open Your Eyes and played the Orpheum in his first week on tour. "Igor knows every bit of music Yes ever did," Anderson beams. "He's a Yes fanatic."

Khoroshev steps in for tour-shy keyboardist Rick Wakeman, who left after Keys To Ascension. But it's just another turn in a revolving door that has included drummer Bill Bruford, guitarists Trevor Rabin and Peter Banks and keyboardists Tony Kaye and Patrick Moraz. "You can't expect everybody to do what you want to do," Anderson says. "Our life is a soap opera."

Yet the pioneering group has reached its 30th anniversary. "The mainstay of the whole project is to keep going and believing what we do," he says. "And eventually, we'll get our gold watch at the end of the day." ✦

BRUNSON'S BURNER

Chef's Tour; Elephant Walks

By Richard Brunson

SUMMER TIME IS TRAVEL TIME. FOUR guys in a van have taken to the highways of France in search of excellent wine, cheese, foie gras (goose!) and all manner of charcutiere. French native Christian Touche, food and beverage manager at Clio, made arrangements for Clio chef Ken Oringer and sommelier Ed Peterman, and chef Robert Fathman (taking a rest from designing the kitchen for the new restaurant at 15 Beacon) to accompany Touche home for his best friend's wedding. Along the winding route are stops in Paris, Alsace, Burgundy, Annecy and Lyon.

Also on the move is Rene Michelena of La Bettola, who flies to Aspen this month to accept one of ten awards bestowed by Food & Wine Magazine for Best New Chef of 1998. Accompanying Michelena will be La Bettola owners Marisa Iocco and Rita D'Angelo, and several hundred desserts—miniature Othello cakes of chocolate filled with an orange-flavored white chocolate mousse and raspberries.

Speaking of dessert, congratulations to Brasserie Jo for rescuing profiteroles from the land of dessert cliché. Not only are they delicious, but the warm chocolate sauce is poured over them tableside from a French pitcher until you cry, enough! It's a performance that draws attention, sighs and orders from across the dining room.

With the resurgence of French restaurants and French food in Boston, foie gras is in short supply. Adding fuel to the fire is the menu at Aquitaine, Seth and Shari Woods new place on Tremont Street in the South End, which features a duck and foie gras pate with cornichons and bourgogne moutarde. Other French standards include a traditional cassoulet and pot au feu. Offering two dozen wines by the glass, the bar is already packed. Ron Catanese sold his Botolph's on Tremont location to Aquitaine's owners, and admits he has mixed feelings about leaving the city, but has found that suburban diners are hungry for city bistro-style dining at his new seafood based restaurant, Go Fish, in Natick. Catanese plans to open a second restaurant in Framingham in September called The Rat Pack Café, an upscale café/bistro with a New American cuisine menu, a piano bar, lots of martinis and big tunes from the '60s. All this and parking too!

In the North End, chef Sandra Russo plans to open her own restaurant, Eva, in early July on Endicott Street—the old Oasis Café location. For a comfortable atmosphere, Russo will have warm paint tones and couches throughout. The menu will feature moderately priced country Mediterranean fare and include her personal favorite, game foods, and her signature crab cakes.

Oasis Café owner/chef Jill Rodgers closed the restaurant last fall after a decade of providing American home-style food with great desserts in a sea of Italian restaurants. However, after a brief hiatus, Rodgers is back in the kitchen of Mucho Gusto Cafe, her old friend Oz Mondejar's Fenway restaurant. Desserts are part of her contribution and include her delicious banana caramel pie, mocha chocolate cake and mango cheesecake.

That's not Godzilla you hear lumbering from Davis Square in Somerville to Porter Square in Cambridge. It's the Elephant Walk, which has packed its trunk and will be moving into the Finnegans Wake location late this summer. Co-owner Robert Perry says the new restaurant will have touches of both the Somerville and Beacon Street restaurants with a grotto of temple ruins downstairs and sleeker, contemporary décor upstairs.

Executive chef Gerard Lopez and chef de cuisine John Harrington will "reinvent" the French/Cambodian menu and an on-site Southeastern Asian market will feature hard-to-find ingredients like kaffir lime leaves and prahok (Cambodian preserved fish), as well as staff trained to offer guidance in home preparation. ✦

UVA

By J. Charles Mokriski

Wines at $10 over wholesale? And superb cuisine too? Is Chuck dreaming?

BUT FOR ITS DARK GREEN AWNING, THE storefront that houses UVA would be indistinguishable from its neighbors on Commonwealth Avenue in Brighton. Wicker chairs, upholstered banquettes, a bare brick wall sporting four giant, colorful posters, table cloths covered with butcher paper and lively recorded music evoke the atmosphere of a bistro.

Appearances can be deceiving. UVA's casual decor belies the seriousness of its endeavor. This is one fine restaurant, from its creatively conceived and professionally executed cuisine to its superb wine list, offering over 100 bottles at a uniform markup of only $10 over wholesale.

UVA's revolutionary wine-pricing policy deserves special mention, especially in a city where many upscale restaurants show no shame in marking their wines up to four and even five times cost. UVA, in contrast, sells most of the wines on its list for less than the prices they would fetch in a wine store. An example was the 1996 Pernand-Vergelesses, les Boutieres ($26). This refined red Burgundy from the domain Marius Delarche showed fine, forward fruit balanced with just the proper degree of acidity. Its classic pinot noir bouquet was appropriately showcased by the oversize Riedel crystal globes in which it was served. It could well have been the highlight of the meal were not the cuisine that followed so superb.

Two distinct levels of cuisine are offered at UVA: well-executed trattoria fare, including mix-and-match pizzas and pasta; and more ambitious, elaborate preparations that reveal the considerable imagination and talents of the chef. The simple pasta dishes included fresh capellini, delightfully firm in texture—a result not easy to achieve with these ultrathin strands. The Bolognese sauce that we chose to dress it was rich and meaty. A 14-inch "pizzetta"—its size rendering the diminutive of its name ironic—came with a choice of 20 toppings. We selected caramelized onions and pepperoni, marrying sweet and spicy tastes with a well-turned tomato sauce and mellow mozzarella cheese. The crust was impeccably thin and crisp.

More elaborate pasta included cavatelli with rock shrimp, white beans and roasted tomatoes in an herb-lemon butter ($13.75). These firm pasta twists, like gnocchi made with wheat flour rather than potato, were accompanied by tiny, tasty shrimp, fleshy tomatoes and delicately stewed basil leaves. Shaved, not grated, Romano cheese, at once salty and creamy, was the perfect garnish.

Main courses included splendid herb-crusted halibut with sea scallops and braised summer vegetables ($16.75). The scallops were luscious, tender and sweet. The flesh of the halibut, enveloped in a parsley-flecked herbed crust, was both moist and flaky. The vegetables, substantial cubes of carrots, beets and what we took to be turnips—we had thought those were fall or winter vegetables—were swimming in a flavorful bouillon of tomato.

As good as the halibut was, it was overshadowed by the stuffed breast of veal with veal sweetbreads and summer greens ($18.75). The veal was fork tender and redolent of thyme. A rich, intensely flavorful shallot-studded brown sauce made this preparation as hearty as it was delicious, and the sautéed sweetbreads added a touch of lightness and delicacy. A mound of pleasantly bitter spinach completed the felicitous ensemble.

UVA's desserts are huge. The best was a dark coffee ice cream with sweet zeppoles and caramel sauce ($5.75). The strong coffee flavor of the ice cream, the light, almost ethereal dough of the zeppoles and the sweet-smoky caramel constituted a harmonious combination. Chocolate mousse and bread pudding with chocolate ice cream and mocha crème anglais ($6.25) was a combination of three desserts that shared no common theme. The chocolate mousse, evidencing a hint of orange zest, was particularly delicious, while the bread pudding seemed dry and austere in contrast.

UVA's servers, attired in blue jeans and blue denim shirts, were friendly, efficient and accommodating. They promptly refilled water glasses, supplied extra plates for tasting and sharing, and cheerfully and efficiently straightened out a mistaken order that was probably more our fault than theirs.

UVA takes its name from the Italian word for grape, a name most apt in view of its extraordinary, value-priced wine list and excellent Italian cuisine. ✦

Tracey Powell

WINE

Wine + Chocolate

By Sandy Block

A contender for the eighth deadly sin

MY IMMEDIATE REACTION THE FIRST time someone told me that they did not crave chocolate at all waking moments was to think: What? That can't possibly be. I remember accusing them of lying. "You say what-you don't really like it?" I asked. "Here, maybe you haven't tried these before." But to my amazement, the emergency Heath Bar I never left home without was declined. Same thing with the shiny foil-wrapped Chunky I was waving in the other hand.

Since then I've learned tolerance of people with truly weird food preferences. I can accept someone disliking chocolate, although I must admit I find indifference to it unimaginable. But I still get a charge from the drug, I mean food, in virtually every shade and form it can take (with the exception of a bizarre spicy chicken dish sauced with cocoa that I once tried at a restaurant in the Southwest, about which the less said the better).

It's natural then that long ago I would begin trying to combine two passions and test the theory that somewhere a wine and a chocolate dessert existed that were truly made for each other. In the process, I've ruined the flavors of more than a few good glasses of wine, but have also discovered some extraordinary treats.

When I first began tasting red wines, some of the notes that cropped up repeatedly in the notebooks I kept on very ripe cabernet and merlot were "chocolate" or "cocoa," and although I've since read that others have enjoyed these big, sturdy, dry red wines with something chocolaty, I can honestly say I've only had one positive experience in this regard. It was back in the days when powerful, high-alcohol, hugely tannic, monster mountain cabernet was all the rage in Napa, and anyone who didn't like the style was told to try it again. The inky beverage in my glass, from one of the drought years in the mid-'70s, refused to reveal any flavor.

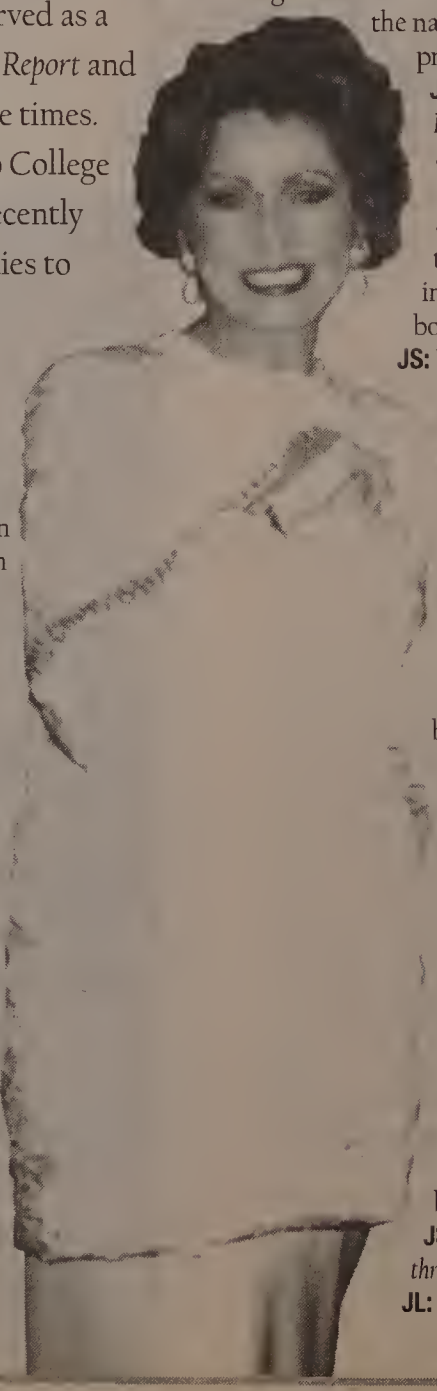
I still had some left when ordering dessert, which, to console myself for the poor wine choice, was the chocolatiest thing on the menu: a reine de saba (dense, flourless, bittersweet chocolate almond cake) with a vein of raspberry preserve running down the middle. It was delicious, if a bit dry, and absent-mindedly I tasted some wine: Viola! Magic: The rich textured cake matched the intensity of the wine beautifully, softening its tannins and opening its fruit flavors, which were wonderful echoes of the raspberry.

Like many wonderful things you experience accidentally and then vainly try to re-create, it never quite happened again. The lesson I eventually learned was that dry wines and chocolate hardly ever work. Forget about the flavor analogy: Chocolate usually coats the palate, so that tasting dry wine alongside it is impossible.

The dessert's luscious sweetness strips all flavor from the wine, and it ends up tasting hollow, acrid and tinny. On the other hand, wines that are rich in body, full in flavor, quite sweet, warm and mellow stand a fighting chance, particularly in the company of deep-colored, intensely chocolate desserts.

So what's the quintessential wine match for a chocolate dessert? Red, oak-aged, fortified wine. The principle I follow is to choose a wine based on the color of the chocolate, with dark brown-black chocolates requiring opaque, ruby-colored wines and the lighter milk chocolate desserts working well with lighter-colored wines that have experienced longer wood aging. Adding tangy fruit flavors to the dessert increases the likelihood of the wine working, as does mixing nuts, caramel, toffee or raisins.

Among my favorite fortified wine selections for various types of chocolate desserts are the following:



- Tawny port: with mocha flavors, chestnut or walnut and chocolate combinations, chocolate-dipped apricots and milk chocolates in general
- Pedro Ximinez sherry or Malaga: with rich, syrupy bittersweet chocolates
- Banyuls: the best all-purpose chocolate cake accompaniment, a little-seen French "vin doux naturel" with flavors of dried fruits and toffee. ✦

Soroff/On JANET LANGHART

Janet Langhart, former Boston TV personality and currently the president of her own communications company, lives in Washington, D.C. with her husband, William Cohen, President Clinton's secretary of defense and a former senator from Maine. An Indiana native, Langhart was one of the first black women to gain prominence in broadcasting. She was the host of Good Day, Channel 5's popular morning talk show, from 1981 to 1985. She has also worked as a columnist for the Boston Herald, as an overseas correspondent in Europe, Africa and the Middle East for the nationally syndicated You Asked For It and as a correspondent for Entertainment Tonight. An avid horsewoman and polo player, she's been nominated for an Emmy, played herself in a TV movie, served as a spokesperson for Avon Cosmetics and U.S. News and World Report and judged the Miss America Pageant an unprecedented three times. She serves on several boards, including the United Negro College Fund, has appeared on numerous magazine covers and recently received credit for providing badly needed medical supplies to refugees in eastern Europe.

Jonathan Soroff: When you were at Channel 5, you refused to pick lottery numbers because you said you didn't want to be "Vanna Black." Does that mean you don t watch Wheel of Fortune?

Janet Langhart: Actually, I quite like Vanna White, and I didn't mean it as an insult to her, but I did feel it was a poor use of someone with my background and experience.

JS: As the first lady of the armed forces, do you get to wear a uniform?

JL: No. Do you think I should?

JS: Sure. You'd look great in epaulets—maybe something military by Chanel. So what are the perks of your position?

JL: Well, there's a certain amount of privilege involved, and getting to meet the people who defend and serve our country is wonderful. But I think the greatest perk is watching how my husband's mind works. He's brilliant.

JS: What about security precautions?

JL: Sure, there are some. All my mail gets checked before I open it, things like that. But I don't want to go into too much detail. That would sort of defeat the purpose, don't you think?

JS: Probably. Then tell me this: Is Poland Springs really what it means to be from Maine?

JL: I haven't spent much time there, but that's what the ad says, and that's all we keep in the house. I was a Perrier drinker before I married my husband.

JS: Tell me a secret about the Pentagon.

JL: What kind of security clearance do you have?

JS: OK, tell me something about the Pentagon most people don't know.

JL: Well, it's open to the public. You can take a tour.

JS: Pro or con—gays in the military and "Don't ask, don't tell"?

JL: I think it's a sound policy. No one should be punished for their sexual preference. But what's important in the military is discipline and doing the job well. The armed forces have to act cohesively, as a unit, and that means leaving personal issues out of it, which is what "Don't ask, don't tell" is supposed to do.

JS: To be a Washington insider, does it help to have no conscience?

JL: Just the opposite. Most of the people who come here to work in government really do it because they want to effect change and improve things. It's not nearly as cynical as people seem to think.

JS: What's the strangest thing you've ever seen on Capitol Hill?

JL: Well, I got married in the Senate building, and as I started down the aisle, the first person I saw was Strom Thurmond. I'd never really pictured him as a guest at my wedding.

JS: Is there more waste inside the beltway of a 300-pound man or the Beltway of Washington?

JL: Oh, I suppose there's some unnecessary spending, but keep in mind that the federal government is like a huge corporation. There's bound to be some excess, because that's the nature of a bureaucracy, but the bureaucracy's necessary to keep all the programs going that we take for granted.

JS: Your home is at 701 Pennsylvania Avenue—899 doors away from the White House. Ever been subpoenaed by a grand jury?

JL: Bite your tongue!

JS: How many people would have to die for your husband to become president?

JL: None, I hope, and I don't think he wants to be president. But in terms of succession, I think as secretary of defense, he's technically sixth in line. In practical terms, he's fifth, because Madeleine Albright wasn't born in this country and couldn't serve.

JS: What's the worst thing you've ever read about yourself?

JL: My age. When they've printed it correctly.

JS: You're a polo player. Isn't that like trying to commit suicide on horseback?

JL: It is dangerous. When I used to drive up to the Myopia Hunt Club, I'd think, "Why am I doing this? It's crazy." Then I'd get on my horse and forget all about the fear. Being on horseback is the most exciting, exhilarating thing. It's almost spiritual.

JS: You've judged the Miss America Pageant three times. Doesn't that call into question your feminist credentials?

JL: Who says I'm a feminist? I think we've gotten beyond that. But, yes, when I was first asked, I thought, "This is silly—girls parading around in bathing suits." Then I learned what it was really about—these women are competing for scholarship money—and you can't really fault anything that helps people further their education.

JS: You were once nominated for an Emmy but lost. Any words of sympathy for Susan Lucci?

JL: She doesn't need them. The fact of the matter is that everyone remembers her and the 18 times she didn't win, but nobody remembers who did. So who's better off?

JS: Good point. Now, true or false—Al Gore, like the moon, is made of green cheese?

JL: False. He's made of integrity, intelligence—all the right stuff.

JS: You've worked all over the world as a foreign correspondent. Do you have any travel tips?

JL: No, but I wish someone could teach me how to pack. I always bring too much. I feel so guilty about the security people who have to carry my bags. It's terrible.

JS: One last question. When you get bad service in a store or a restaurant, do you ever threaten to have your husband call in the Marines?

JL: No. I can handle things for myself, thank you very much. ✦

LOVE at First Sight

So what if it doesn't last forever?

It's pretty grand while it does.

by Kristen Bisson

Fever, fire, a spell, a thunderbolt: Love has inspired its own dictionary of simile for that moment when the carnival of life spins to a halt. One day you're schlepping along ho hum and then—bammo!—your eyes light on the most delicious creature you've ever seen. Suddenly, a returned glance, the gleam in an eye or a charming smile carries the power to alter your existence. In a wonderful instant, you'll never be quite the same again. Ain't that a kick in the head?

The following young Bostonians shared their own experiences with love at first sight, some in the truest meaning of the phrase—when a chance meeting turned into a heavy-duty involvement. Other stories can perhaps more truthfully be described as love at third or fourth or fifth sight. But in all the instances, a certain series of events led to, shall we say, that old black magic....

Anne Kirby Alvarez

Amelia Copeland

39, publisher and editor of the Cambridge-based Paramour magazine, a quarterly journal of erotic literature and poetry

Five years ago, stuek in the Newark Airport on a layover to California, Amelia Copeland glimpsed at a distanee a friendly looking Howard Stern-type stranger. (We should warn you: Copeland's into hair.) He was on his way home to Florida. She sauntered over and said something "inane." But that spontaneous gesture set in motion a somewhat bizarre two-year, long-distanee relationship.

The fast-talking Jewish New Yorker with the hair called Copeland inecssantly for a while, up to three times a day, sometimes drunk, always from his car. "There was usually some big, long exeuse about why he couldn't call from home," says Copeland. During one sueh call from his car to her, she slyly retorted, "Well, you could at least pull over."

An arehiteet, the stranger at most would reveal that he was divoreed and had a son. Copeland loved the flirtatious banter: "One time I heard him say, 'two paeks of Marlboro Lights, please,' and I said jokingly, 'Hey, next time you take me out, I want to go to dinner and I want to order.' " The two made plans to visit more than once, but as those things sometimes go, they simply lost touch.

Rob Tallas

25, Boston Bruins goalie, just finished his fourth pro season

"It was honestly like a movie, I literally knoeked her off her feet," says Rob Tallas of a girl he met on vacation in Mexieo at age 17. He picked her up off the floor of a bar after the two collided eoming out of the bathrooms. Sparks flew, and the itinerary for the rest of the vaeation was erased and improvised. Five blissful days and a wrenching goodbye left him devising a plan to fly Rachel Horn up from Tucson, Arizona, to visit.

Baek home in Canada, he waited the requisite three days, ealled her up and spent 45 minutes on the phone with her mom convineing her he was trustworthy. "I said to [Mrs. Horn], 'You ean talk to my mom, feel free,' " laughs Tallas. He flew the girl up, they spent two great weeks running around Vancouver crazy in love, and then parted never to see each other again.

"I moved, she moved, we lost toueh," sighs Tallas. Still, he couldn't forget her, going so far several years later as to eall every Horn in the Tucson direetory late one night, with no luck. "It was the craziest thing I've ever done," says Tallas. "I would really love to see her again."

Mary Ellen Leahy

27, lead singer of Trona, which has just released its second CD, Red River. The band is currently on tour opening for X

Who's the guy near the keg? wondered Mary Ellen Leahy three years ago at a listening party for Bob Mould, of Husker Du fame.

Both she and Chris Lohring, a partner of Tremont Ale (the beer guy), were there hoping to rub elbows with their hero Mould. "I thought [Lohring] was just a dream," says Leahy, who in a "totally ridiculous and queer" move, sent her friend over with the old my-friend-thinks-she-knows-you line. "He fell for it," says the singer. Though the air was sizzling, the faet that Lohring had a girlfriend put a wrench in the works for Leahy. Still, as fate would have it, a couple of months later, he'd moved out of his girlfriend's plaee and was living with friends when they met again at the Middle East.

Unprompted, Cosmie Records owner Deb Klein gave Lohring the singer's number. "My girlfriends were bossing him around from the start," laughs Leahy. The couple went for eoffee, ended up at Delux Cafe and have been inseparable ever since.

Didi Emmons

25, chef and part-owner of Pho Republique in Central Square and author of the Vegetarian Planet cookbook, will soon be at work on a second book

On a food-writing assignment at Calla Lily Cafe three years ago, Didi Emmons tasted a ehieken vindaloo dish that was so delicious, she had to meet its maker.

"Somebody had told me a eute guy worked in the kitehen there," says Emmons. "That might have been in the back of my head." She marehed into the kitehen, met ehef Jeff and was instantly smitten, not only by the epicure's charisma but by his similar interest in Indian cooking.

"I went home and said to myself, I'm in love," she admits. They were definitely falling after the first date, Emmons remembers, but it was the salad he made on their second that swept her off her feet in starry-eyed culinary adoration. This guy is a genius, she mused, it's so perfeet.

Good enough for a solid four months together to follow, until her writing claimed too much time for chef Jeff's liking. Disillusioned with the Boston scene, he moved to Seattle, but Emmons' cookbook was very much a success.

Shawn Sturnick

30, one of four members of the Blue Man Group, is extremely adept at catching things with his mouth

Try as she might, this writer could not get Shawn Sturnick to eoncede—though he did speak—any other identity than that of a man in blue paint. Interestingly enough, Sturnick falls in love every night around 8:45 pm (twiee a night on the weekends). Shawn, you see, is the Blue Man who chooses the Twinkie-eating lady.

What draws him is "an uncensored response when I see [a woman in the audienee] and I start getting elose, whether it's nervous laughter or shying away or a beaming smile. As long as I ean tell it's honest, I know she's the one for me."

Once onstage with the mute but rhythmic trio in blue, the lucky lady of the evening wins the longing stares of Sturniek, who proclaims, "Whoa, it can be quite explosive; it's a first date kind of thing: sharing a meal, setting up music and proper lighting." It invariably breaks his heart to see her go.

So mueh that he must find her at the end of the evening and bestow a sweet blue kiss on her cheek. Has he ever really fallen for one of his chosen? "I love them all," says Sturnick. "It wouldn't be fair to the woman I'll fall in love with tomorrow."

Steve Burton

Channel 4 sportscaster

Steve Burton's story goes back a few years. He fell in love at first sight a la The Wonder Years in the second grade. Pigtails, dark hair, singing "I'm Leaving on a Jet Plane" in the school play: Linda Costanza was the desired sweetheart of all the Little Leaguers, but she moved away that same year.

"I thought I'd never see her again," laughs Burton, remembering it took him at least a couple of months to get over it, espeeially since he didn't realize she'd only moved to the next town over.

The two met again at a softball game three years ago. All grown up, she recognized him and came over to say hello. Too bad for her, the pigtails were gone and Burton's been happily married to wife Ginni for nine years.

Ben Mezrich

29, upcoming projects include Skin, an X-Files book due out in September, and a TBS TV movie of his thriller Reaper, scheduled for March 1999

In his senior year at Harvard, the future novelist fell for a coed he'd known throughout college. "It was definitely one of those tunnel vision situations where you only see one person in the room," says Mezrieh. He was at a Halloween party where, overheated from wearing six pillows for his costume as a fat guy, he watched tongue-tied as the 5-foot-10-inch "gorgeous, tall, perfeet" Joanne walked in.

"I was just blown away in that moment; it was weird because she looked a lot like an image I had had when I was little—a daydream of the perfeet woman for me." Mezrich's best friend negotiated a date for him, and the two have been on and off sinee.

A former pastry chef for Rialto, she's now in New York. He, of course, is juggling a number of impressive contracts with big New York publishing firms like Harper Collins.

Blake Hazard

21, Harvard senior, artist and singer with self-titled band, also appears with Star Hustler on the recently released CD Transamber; she's a great-granddaughter of F. Scott Fitzgerald

"When you're completely ready and you know they're the one, there's no funny feeling about it," says Blake Hazard.

"It's not like having a crush on someone; there's not that hesitaney." She knows whereof she speaks. Two years ago the singer fell madly in love with sculptor and Phish set designer Lars Fisk at a gallery opening in their Vermont hometown. "My best friend was hitting on his best friend," she remembers, "and I had to instigate the conversation."

Fisk, six years older, drove a cool '50s-style car and wore a sweater that reminded Hazard of her dad. From that point on they were "totally silly in love and couldn't bear to be parted from each other," she giggles.

Four months later she headed back to Boston for school. What went wrong? "When you get together with a bang," she says, "you generally go out with a bang." Ain't that the truth.

Patrick Lockley

29, owns Curious Liquids, the immensely popular year-old cafe downtown, curiously in possession of a 2 am license

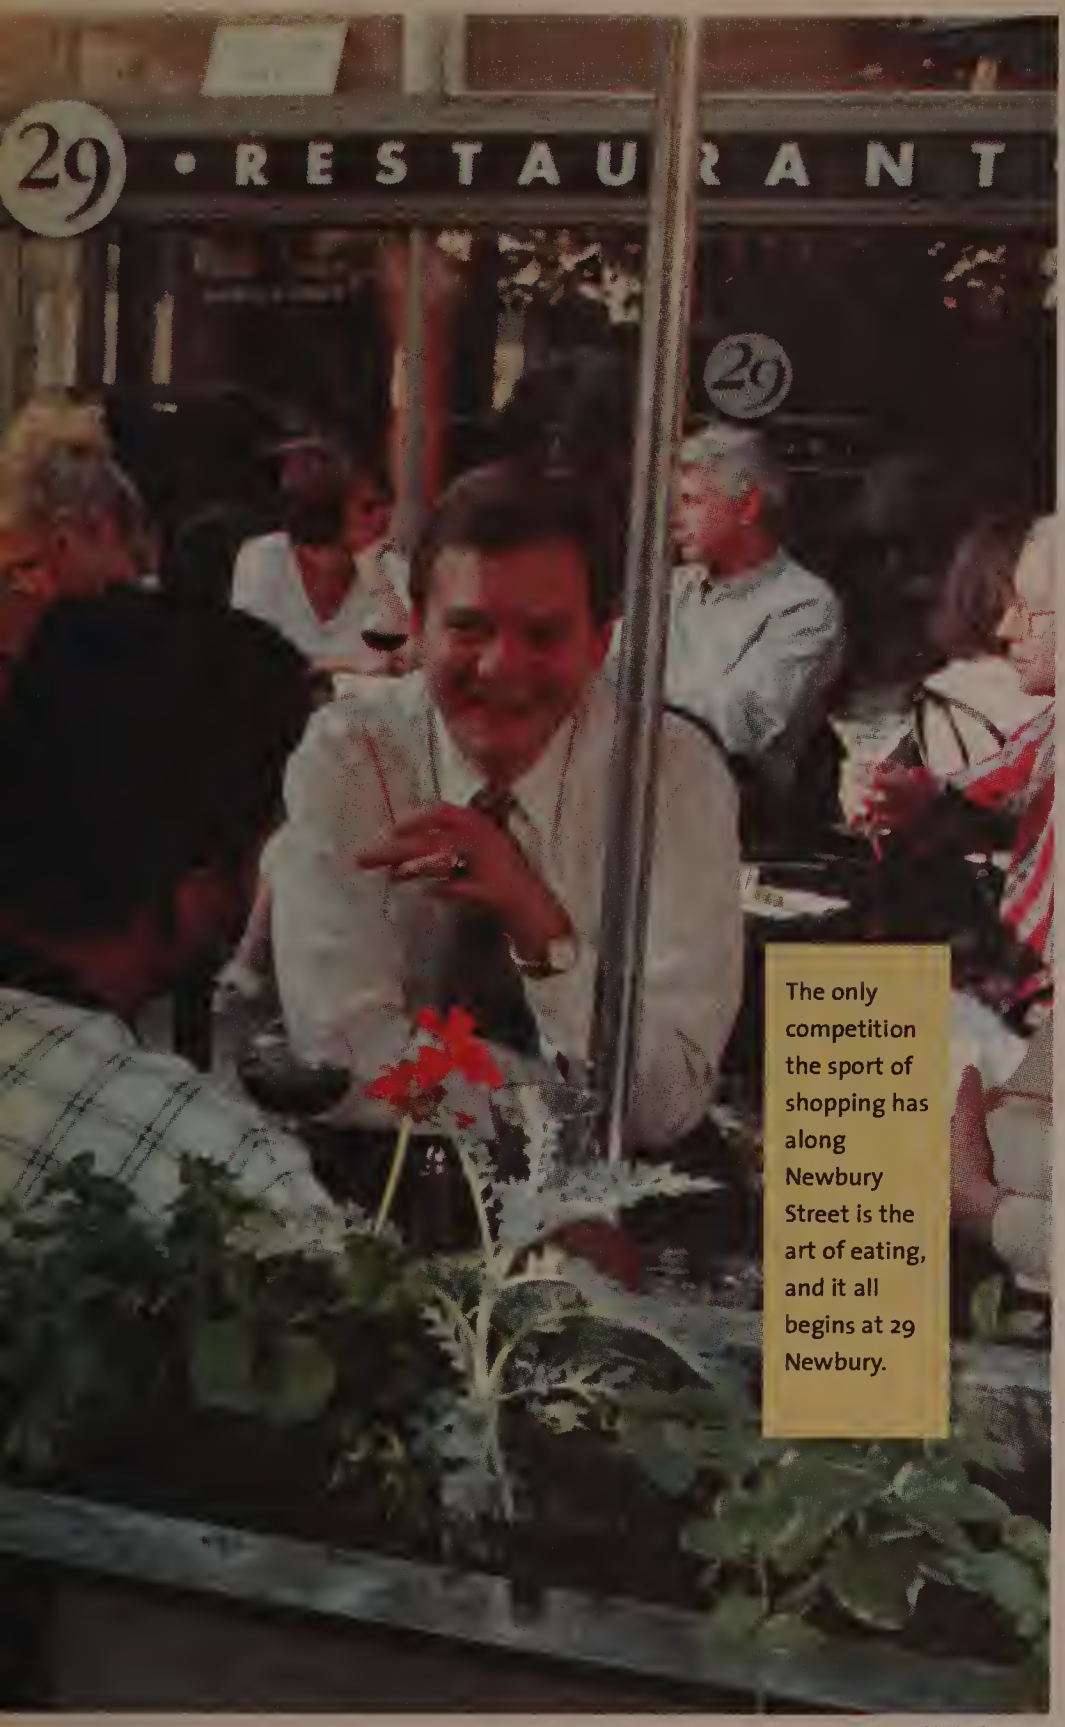
"I'm in love; her name is Julie," says Patriek Lockley of his current girlfriend, who happened to mention to him after they'd been together for some time that at first she hadn't known if she was attracted to him.

Theirs is the anti-love-at-first-sight story, more like "18th sight," as Lockley coined it. "I have been known to fall in love several times on a spring afternoon," admits the coffee maven.

"Somehow, the faet that we were not immediately drawn together makes it feel much more stable and less ephemeral."

They met at a party, she frequented the eafe, they dated on several oceasions—no big deal. But somewhere along the way between the cappuccino maker and the eash register, l'amour bloomed, prompting Lockley to describe his current status as "deliriously in love on a daily basis." ✦

BARE BASICS GUIDE



TO SUMMER PATIO DINING

The 50 hottests spots for bona fide outdoor dining in Boston & Cambridge

by Alexandra Hall Nudes by Rob van Petten

The only competition the sport of shopping has along Newbury Street is the art of eating, and it all begins at 29 Newbury.

Mette Ottosson

NO, Alfresco is not a mob member. And no, patio seating isn't merely something you can order at Pottery Barn. This is summer, for god's sake: Eating outdoors is now officially serious business—socially and gastronomically—and you'd better know the entire drill if you're going to survive the season's scene intact.

You think we're kidding? On Boston and Cambridge's maze of sunlit terraces and shady decks, it's not a matter of simply plunking yourself down at the closest sidewalk table. Think you'd like a few relaxed, pretense-free moments of solitude to sip a chardonnay and watch the world waltz by? Try that at any of Boylston Street's raucous party outposts and you're likely to end up wishing the world would end, not waltz. Looking to put that new bellybutton ring on display? Don't go donning any cropped tops in Harvard Square's hoity-toity havens if you're not out for a handful of sneers. Save it for the exhibitionist catwalk that is Newbury Street, dear.

So now you see our point: As with most anything, dining outside with any aplomb is simply a matter of context. You've got to know where to go, whom you'll see, what to wear and eat. And it's a short season; you don't have time to waste on anything but the best. Luckily for you, we've laid them all out by neighborhood: Boston's 50 hottest outdoor eateries, from the patios with panache to the quaintest cafes, from the relaxing little nooks to the trendiest houses of style. Slide on a pair of Oakleys and get started.

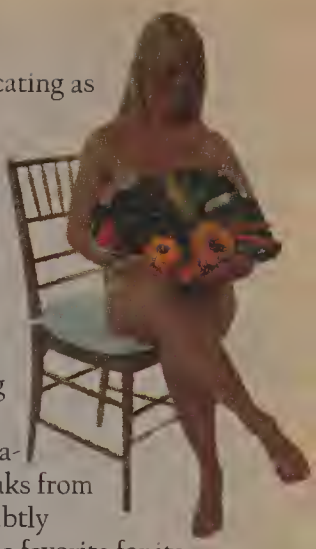
Newbury Street



Boston's answer to the Champs Elysees, Rodeo Drive, Michigan Avenue...it's where the city's modish throngs gather to make the march past the hallowed doors of Chanel, Armani, countless boutiques and art galleries. But there's as much hard-core people-watching and feeding to be done here as there is shopping—executed with the same lovable level of pomp, circumstance, flash and style.

It all starts at 29 Newbury, where sunny days clog the postage-stamp-size sidewalk spot with couture-clad yupsters. Between bites of New American dishes almost as ornate as their attire, diners scope each other out with abandon. The same holds true over at Armani Café, where an expansive cluster of tables holds more chirping cell phones than bodies, and the passersby are watched and scrutinized like runway models. Meals here are akin to Armani duds: cleanly designed, fundamentally Italian, expensive and worth it. Carpaccio and shrimp pizza are two such standouts.

Heartier Italian gets wolfed down out in front of Davio's, the small, aroma-filled niche across the street. Ciao Bella, too, serves up hot pasta and cold salads on its popular corner space. Smaller tidbits are on the menu at Tapeo, a block's hop over. The tapas bar's picturesque seating deals in a slew of the Spanish mini-dishes of its namesake—all as flavorfully intoxicating as the house's potent sangria.

If Mediterrancan just isn't your idea of exotic, seek out the sumptuous Indian at Kashmir (where you'll meet with an equally chic, but much less self-admiringly chi-chi, crew), or the healthful likes of Pho Pasteur. Here, at the newest incarnation of the popular Pasteur chain, diners casually converge inside the rail fence to slurp pho, the spicy (and inexpensive) Vietnamese rendition of chicken noodle soup.

And then there's the utterly wholesome, apple-pie-peddling contingent of American restaurants: Joe's Bar & Grill heads the pack, bellowing its patriotic zeal with red, white and blue paraphernalia, celebratory atmosphere and plate upon plate of steaks from its centrally located corner of Dartmouth Street. A bit more subtly homey is Stephanie's, arbiter of sophisticated comfort food and a favorite for its big patio and relative lack of attitude. Charley's Saloon, too, brings its (albeit calculated) old-fashioned charm and classic American fare to the street on its pretty, tree-laced terrace. Caffeine-dependent but Starbucks-weary strollers can drop onto the relatively laid-back patio of Roasters Coffee, but if you're looking for the least pretentious eatery on the avenue, high-tail it to The Travis, an honest, no-frills coffee shop that serves as an unapologetic antidote to the rue's upscale demeanor.

Back Bay

It may come as a shock to the see-and-be-seen system, but Newbury Street ain't the only game in Back Bay. A diverse clan of outdoor eateries dot the entire neighborhood, from the tony likes of Pignoli—the breezy courtyard that draws foodie devotees of chef Lydia Shire by the tableful—to the loud, twentysomething-packed rooftop deck at The Rattlesnake.

These days chef groupies are also flocking to the steps of Brasserie Jo, the recently opened branch of the Chicago original launched by national food darling chef Jean Joho. In the Colonnade Hotel, the upscale restaurant's outdoor setup is quite narrow, limiting seatings to two-person tables. Almost as coveted are the tables at The Cottonwood Café, where tangy, oft-lauded classic margaritas are the draw for a casual, mostly denim-wearing crowd.

Up at the Mass. Ave. end of Boylston, Mucho Gusto Café grills up homestyle Cubano flavors for its diverse group of regulars and serves all in an appropriately island-colors setting. Fish fiends pile into the blue-shadowed sidewalk space at Skipjack's, at the back end of Copley Square behind Trinity Church. And smack in the middle of the Square, a handful of eclectic places are ideally situated for overseeing the area's bustle: Survey the scene over Thai at Bangkok Blue or the globally inspired dishes on the always-jammed patio of Small Planet.

Creative sandwiches designed by and in honor of the city's best-known chefs comprise the bulk of the Parish Café's menu—scarf one down on the relaxed, raised deck. And hopheads should head for the windy seating outside the Back Bay Brewing Company; microbrew specials, a decent suds-based menu and a young, professional crowd lend the place a lighthearted air.

Clambakes

If only a full-on, salty, dripping, wonderful mess of shellfish fulfills your notion of summertime supping, call Clambake Celebrations at 800-423-4038. Based on Cape Cod, the company will ship a full clambake: lobster, steamers, mussels, new potatoes, corn on the cob and Italian sausage, packed in seaweed. Bibs and nutcrackers are included.

Looking for less of a production? Legal Sea Foods' one-person lobster takeout package (Boston Park Plaza location, 33 Columbus Ave.) comes with a choice of starch and vegetable sides. You have to pick it up in person; cost runs about $22.

Bay State Lobster (379 Commercial St.) and James Hook & Company (15 Northern Ave.) also sell the red beasts precooked and by the pound.

freedom, each extreme offers the other.

And it's amazing how addictive that sense of freedom can be: Just find a table at Rowes Wharf Café, for instance, and witness the feeling of escape take hold. Ditto Tia's, discreetly tucked under The Marriott Hotel. Though meals at the former are the superior of the two, both restaurants offer full menus and simply beautiful—and invigoratingly blustery—locations for a drink. It's the same reason crowds swarm into Joe's Waterfront, the second incarnation spun from the Newbury Street original—that, plus the house's hearty, meat-centric menu.

Those who feel traiterous ingesting anything other than seafood while on the water should get themselves to The Barking Crab—the tasty, straightforward shellfish defines fish shack chic. Can't get enough of the salt air? You'll need to crack a crab or two at Mark's Crab House down on Northern Avenue.

But to snag some of the most prime seating real estate around, jump over to Café Esplanade and snag a chair under the trees, in front of both the Hatch Shell and the Charles River. Don't expect groundbreaking fare or five-course meals—this is mostly a takeout stand with tables—but throw your feet up and savor a sandwich among the moving sea of Rollerbladers, runners, bikers, Frisbee flippers and sailboats; there's a tangible energy here, and you're in the eye of the storm.

Waterfront

Unlike dining in Boston's landlocked neighborhoods, eating on the harbor isn't simply about dining in any self-congratulatory, cosmopolitan, urbane kind of way. Instead, a meal on the tip of the ocean takes its appeal from its fusion of city and nature—from the contrast, and thus novelty and

The South End

With all the speed, flash and skill of an executive chef's boning knife, this 19th-century housing development has morphed itself into a cosmopolitan Mecca, tossing up art studios and galleries, funky little boutiques, art centers and (most important to our purpose) an army of kick-ass restaurants.

We would call the Claremont Café a typical neighborhood gem—with its devoted local crowds and unassuming feel—but in a neighborhood this sophisticated and experimental, even the typical is atypical. That kind of genuine edginess gets taken outside here, along with the delicious South American and Mediterranean-inspired specials.

Grillfish, now something of a South End institution, packs 'em in nightly for its fresh and reasonably priced seafood, and its noisy, fun outdoor patio. Harvey's newly constructed patio is already swamped with dapper locals in for the bistro fixings (not to mention the mile-high mud pie) and the bird's eye view of St. Botolph Street.

Under the oversize umbrellas in front of La Bettola you'll find chef Rene Michelena's feats of fusion—Italian, mostly, with hints at flavors from around the globe. And anchoring the entire scene both literally and figuratively is Hamersley's Bistro, the South End shrine to serious caters far and wide. This culinary heavy-hitter's French country dishes are celestial enough to warrant consumption under the stars, and given its central, spacious outdoor locale, it's doubtful you'll need your arm twisted to get out there.

Downtown

You'd think that the daytime home to the town's workaholic masters of the universe would be jammed with little more than pseudo-gourmet, express holes in the wall and McDonald's. Ah, but lest you forget, with power comes that intense merging of adrenaline and taste buds, the Power Meal—found to be worlds more effective as a venue for business dealings than the Happy Meal.

The power meal is particularly effective when executed outside, so everyone can see just how powerful you really are. That's where the classic French likes of Maison Robert, and its refined, fenced courtyard seating, come into play in front of that bastion of power past, the Old City Hall building.

Newest on the restaurant scene is The Black Rhino, in the spot formerly known as Il Panino and, appropriately, 21 Broad. Rhino has an outdoor patio and, in a week or so, will have a rooftop bar, too.

Like to make fun of tourists? Head for the Il Panino and Plaza III sun-dappled spaces on the cobblestoned swirl of Faneuil Hall Marketeplace. There's The Marketplace Grill, too, for 5 o'clock swilling and seafood sampling.

Like to watch suburbanites rush to their theater seats? David's in the Theatre District, presents a centrally situated spot to eyeball the public.

But those who work hard also tend to play hard—pool, in this case, at any of the seemingly endless tables at The Rack. That's in between runs for the restaurant's open front, through, to the sunken sidewalk dining area where they fill up on entrees such as spice-rubbed salmon.

You Scream, I Scream...

Once those midsummer heat waves start hitting, even atheists tend to get all spiritual—about ice cream. For people of every creed, the only real trick is knowing which temples to frequent and which altars to pray at.

Newbury Street plays mecca to most. J.P. Licks (No. 352), perched at the funky upper end, draws skateboarders, families and shoppers who hungrily lap up the simple but intense flavors (white coffee's a favorite). Don't be put off by the two Twilight Zone mannequin likenesses of Ben & Jerry (No. 174), and you'll be rewarded with all the ice cream moguls' staple flavors—the original chocolate chip cookie dough, Phish food, rainforest crunch—as well as a rarity among the Boulevard of Boutiques' ice creameries: outdoor seating. Emack & Bolio's (No. 290) is a tiny Back Bay hole in the wall that provides the scoop on superb fruit-based specialties like cherry cobbler and peach sweet cream.

The People's Republic counters with its own tabernacles. Follow the cult of Steve Herrell, pioneer of that brilliant '80s invention, the smoosh-in. He keeps the delicious tradition intact at his Harvard Square outpost, Herrell's (15 Dunster St.). Order up any flavor (try the chocolate pudding), then point to some tidbits (suggestion: banana and Reese's peanut butter cups); they'll mash you up a mixture not easily forgotten.

Inman Square's Christina's (1255 Cambridge St.) churns out homemade flavors like burnt sugar and the ethereal Nietzsche's chocolate ascension: a mix of bittersweet chocolate, chocolate mousse ice cream, chocolate chips and brownies.

And for an all-out, no-holds-barred, truly transcendent ice cream experience, Toscanini's is the ice cream über-parlor, the king among creamery kings. This mecca of all artery-clogging indulgences—in Harvard Square (131 Mass. Ave.), Central Square (899 Main St.) and the Stratton Student Center at MIT (84 Mass. Ave.)—creates divine masterpieces like burnt caramel, ginger snap and cardamom ice creams that will leave your taste buds reeling in sweet ecstasy and provide final proof that there is indeed a God.

Harvard Square

Forget those legends of tweedy Crimsonian snootery. These days the Square's diverse crew—from pink-haired punks to silver-haired profs—has necessitated a crop of hangouts and eateries as eclectic as its inhabitants. So you don't need any advanced degrees, and you certainly don't need to know the Augustan thinkers' classical theories on why the metaphysical poetry of John Donne was unwitty. All you really need to know is where to eat.

You'd do worse than to begin at Iruna for incredibly cheap, homestyle Spanish. Head toward the back of the little house to the even more little porch and order up some potato tortilla. There now, see that? You could easily be in Valencia.

Less geographically (but no less gastronomically) transporting is the first-rate Abruzzi at Giannino's, best eaten in the restaurant's cool, sprawling and sunny courtyard. Barely a toss of a salad away, the Charles Hotel's fresh-scrubbed, farmstand-style bistro, Henrietta's Table, spills outdoors, too.

Where do all the anal, Type A, obsessive-compulsive students eat? Probably at Fire + Ice, the choose-it-yourself, get-it-yourself, exactly-the-way-you-like-it "improvisational" grill. Hop up to the main station, point to whatever catches your eye, tap your foot a minute or two while it's cooked in front of you and down the

Picnic Fixings

In Harvard Square, Cardullo's (6 Brattle St.) sets up a well-stocked, custom-made picnic basket, with cold prepared foods (from salads to foie gras with truffles), plus house-baked gingerbread, light-as-a-feather chocolate-almond meringues and any number of bottles from their meticulously selected wine racks. Prices vary depending on your ultimate design.

DeLuca's Markets (239 Newbury St. and 11 Charles St.) will hook you up with a portable gourmet spread: Baskets for four people run between $30 and $150 and include the likes of prosciutto-focaccia sandwiches, double-chocolate macaroons and artichoke-pepper salads. The busy takeout counter at Stephanie's (190 Newbury St.) hooks its devotees up with simple but addictive packaged fixings. Witness the speed with which the Mediterranean meatloaf and grilled dry-rubbed chicken fly out the door. And even if they are a breakfast foodstuff, stock up on a few of the raspberry muffins, too; they're delectable enough to inspire many a breakfast picnic.

Or save some cash by simply grabbing your own basket and filling it with goods from Panificio (144 Charles St.), like baked breads—olive-studded loaves the size of footballs, rotund parmesan boules—or any of their premade sandwiches and salads.

Biga Bread in Charlestown (197 8th St.) whips up savory sandwiches like lemon-tuna with arugula and ham and Jarlsberg, on any of their fantastically chewy breads (the sour cherry bread's a must-eat).

Hi-Rise Pie Co. (56 Brattle St.), the Harvard Square spinoff of the Hi-Rise Bakery (208 Concord Ave., Cambridge), stars excellent to-go foods like French-style roasted chicken, plus the painstakingly fresh baked goods (superlative sourdough, palmiers practically Parisian in stature) that made the original so popular.

Every day, homemade comfort foods like portobello soup, gazpacho and to-die-for lemon squares get carried out of the New England Soup Factory (24 Brookline Pl., Brookline Village) by the barrelful—take yours by the basket.

Hot and Thirsty?

lot of it at a table in the courtyard outside.

And where do all the laid-back Type Bs eat? They cool their heels over at the mother of all outdoor eateries: Au Bon Pain in the Square. Plop in a seat under the trees (uh, beware the birds), chew some croissant, watch a chess game, slurp a latte, spy on the skateboarders, (read)the Times....

Of course, no one could ever completely do away with all of the area's straight-backed staples, particularly when the institution in question is Upstairs at the Pudding, pet stomping ground for Harvard alums, faculty and students (when, that is, their generous parents are in town). Flower—and herb—filled and sunny, its intimate patio-deck is Cambridge's—if not all of the Boston area's—most charming place to eat out of doors.

All the ingredients for a splendid evening of fresh air dining in the South End's La Bettola.

Cambridge

Uh, Harvard? Never heard of it.

Or so it would seem for the rest of Cambridge, which functions just as vibrantly beyond where the ivy grows, thanks very much.

The Kendall area's got its own high-tech lifeline going anyway, and, man, can coding work up an appetite. The proof is sitting out on the sunken deck of The Blue Room, demolishing grilled mahi mahi with the speed of a rapid prototyping signal processor. Or you'll find the pocket-protector crowd next door, defying their stereotype's behavioral tendencies altogether by—get this—socializing on the shady sidewalk outside the Cambridge Brewing Company. And it continues, too, over on the Charles River's edge, over seafood and gin and tonics at the Cambridge Sail Loft.

Alfresco life in Cambridge even continues outside the MIT vicinity, at Daddy-O's, for one: Its delicious, straightforward menu features daily deep-dish pies, hugely filling entrees and don't-miss brunches, but the house's fragrant backyard garden is reason in itself to pull up a chair and dig in.

Kashmir serves traditional Indian fare with distinctive Back Bay flare steps down from Newbury St.

The North End

Technically, there are few spots in the North End that have actual outdoor dining—we're not counting open windows here. You might be able to snag an outdoorish table at a caffe. But if your heart is set on going local outdoors, here's a reminder: The North End's street fairs start in July. See you by the sausage stand.

Toss back a couple of frosty fresh ones with your meal at Back Bay's only sidewalk microbrewery.

GEORGE WASHINGTON was well-known for his crossing of the Delaware. And upon one occasion, our threshold.

IT HAPPENED DURING THE AUTUMN OF 1789, while President Washington was visiting Boston. He called upon an old friend, Major Benjamin Frothingham, who lived in Charlestown.

Later, the two stopped by Warren Tavern for drinks, making Washington one of our most famous patrons. Why not stop by yourself?

And if you happen to know the President, by all means bring him along.

Agenda

BY SALVATORE TUZZEO

Improper choices for weeks of June 17 - June 30

Wednesday JUNE 17

After Work
Head over to Turner Fisheries of Boston (in the Westin Hotel, 10 Huntington Ave.) for the "fresh" hour every Monday through Friday from 5 to 7 pm (isn't that two hours?) There, you can get your tummy filled with oysters, littlenecks and Cape Cod clams for 50¢ each! Stick around until 8 pm (Tuesdays through Saturdays) and your ears will get treated to live jazz too.

Thursday JUNE 18

You're Getting Sleepy
In his original incarnation Frank Santos was the "X-rated hypnotist." Now after toning his zany—, sometimes even steamy—act down, Santos headlines the Comedy Connection's Thursday night spot as the "R-rated hypnotist." Don't fret—he's still as funny as ever. Go see naive audience members step up to the stage and make asses out of themselves while getting duped into thinking they're strippers, Elvis impersonators and kindergarten kids. I hope he doesn't pick on you. Call 248-9700 for more information.

Get down—and possibly dirty—with hypnotist Frank Santos.

Friday JUNE 19

Losing Your Marbles?
Then there's only one place to go—to the marble-playing tournament at Christopher Columbus Park, 1 pm. Contestants young and old can learn the difference between aggies and immies (hey, do you know that one?) and compete in the fun and games against the rest of the shooters for prizes-good prizes-as in a free trip to France. If you don't show up now then you must be losing your marbles.

Saturday JUNE 20

Nice Genes
The New England Genealogical Society plays host to today's seminar titled, "Putting your Ancestors on the Map: Genealogy and Cartography," at noon. Spend an afternoon researching some of your ancestry and you might have a better idea from whence you came. For more information or to register, call 888-AT-NEHGS (888-286-3447).

Sunday JUNE 21

Dad's Day
That's right, today is Father's Day. Go home and see your old man if you do nothing else. For a special father-son bonding moment, take a ride up to White's Pond in Concord—where trout and bass are plentiful—and spend the day fishing, drinking beers and talking about how great the Celts are going to be next season.

Monday JUNE 22

Bird Comes Back To Boston!
Sorry for the tease but it isn't Larry. It's the movie Bird—about the late, great jazz saxophonist Charlie "Bird" Parker who is played believingly by actor Forest Whitaker. The movie, and live jazz concert by Shelley Neill, can be caught at the Coolidge Corner Theater in Brookline for their Jazz In June series. Tickets $8-$10. Call 734-2501.

Tuesday JUNE 23

You Should Be Dancin'
For those of you who like to mix dancing and social drinking (which is basically everybody), head over to Hibernia (25 Kingston St., 266-2258) where one can rub elbows with famous dancers at The Yankee Classic Dance Championship Farewell Party. The fun starts around 8 pm, dress is "swank" and tickets cost $15 at the door. A special performance by the United Irish Amateur Dance Team will be the special featured event.

Wednesday JUNE 24

EGOmaniac
Deborah Henson-Conant is a woman with a harp—an electric one—and she rocks. Go see what she can do at the Lyric Stage (140 Clarendon St.) as she performs tracks from her latest CD titled Altered Ego. Billed as "a tour through the imagination of the artist," this concert is sure to leave you gasping in wonder as she plucks the strings and does her thing. Tickets are $23 to $29 and are available by calling 437-7172.

Deborah Henson-Conan has a harp of gold.

Thursday JUNE 25

Secret Agent Man
Check out the offbeat espionage film, The Secret Agent, directed by the master of suspense himself, Alfred Hitchcock, at the Newton Free Library (330 Homer St., Newton Centre). The cast from this 1936 release includes Robert Young and Peter Lorre—both of whom will leave you glued to your seat. Best of all, it's free. Call the library at 552-7145 for more information.

Friday JUNE 26

Go West
Tonight is a perfect time to head over to The Stanley B. Theater in Hyde Park (45 Fairmount Ave.) to see True West, penned by Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright and film star Sam Shepard (The Right Stuff, The Pelican Brief). The play, a turning tale of sibling rivalry, starts at 8 pm and is directed by Bob Roth. Call 931-2000 for tickets.

Saturday JUNE 27

Brew Ha Ha
Hit up the fourth annual Tremont Brewery Music Festival held at 50 Terminal Street in Charlestown from noon to 9 pm. Down home grub provided by Jake's Boss BBQ of Jamaica Plain is the perfect compliment to the 10 or so live bands to perform, some of which include: Babaloo, Cherry 2000 and Seks Bomba. Call 242-6464 for more information.

Africa's "golden voice" plays the Roxy.

Sunday JUNE 28

Otherworldly
The Roxy (at 279 Tremont Street) plays host to Africa Fête '98, featuring Salif Keita, Papa Wemba, Cheikh Lô and Maryam Musal at 7:30 pm. Keita, an obvious highlight to the evening is hailed by many as "the golden voice of Africa." He will take your breath away with soulful vocals and infectious beats. For more information or for tickets call 876-4275.

Monday JUNE 29

Fore!
Golf junkies take heed! Ride over to Milton's Wollaston Golf Club for the 1998 MasterCard Lee Elder Challenge Golf Tournament and, if you're lucky, hit the links with some celebs. Some of the famous faces participating this year are Travis Knight, JoJo White and Ben Coates. Foursomes interested in participating should dig up the $2,000 entry fee and call 242-4131, otherwise just show up and watch a lot of missed putts.

Tuesday JUNE 30

Seeking Asylum
Head over to the just-formed Improv Asylum Theater (216 Hanover St. in the North End) for what looks to be the best thing that's happened to the Boston comedy scene since that Boston Common sit-com got yanked. Founders Paul D' Amato and Chet Harding—along with Norm Laviolette—form the nucleus of a young, seasoned and very funny group in the spirit of Second City. For show and ticket info., call the box office at 263-6887.

Dear Discount Dick,

We have a problem. You won't take a trade-in on the Tommy Armour 845s I bought from you a couple years back. But Wayland Golf will. And they'll give me demo sets to play on my home course, before I buy, so I can decide which new clubs I really like best. And once I decide, they'll fit me to make sure they're perfect.

You won't do any of this. But you will let me drive all the way out to nowhere to pay the same prices I'll pay at Wayland Golf.

Thanks for caring, Discount Dick. Oh, and have a nice day.

The stake-out ends at 11, and my stomach sounds like there's a loose lug nut rolling around in there.

Dee Dee is complaining how at this late hour it means a TV dinner again. Thanks for sharing that Dee Dee.

Then, she spots it. Legal C Bar & Grille. Open till 1, dinner till midnight. Caribbean specialities like Conch Fritters and Brazilian Red Snapper. It may be late, but the C Bar's jumping. Dee Dee looks at me and asks under her breath, "Are we still in Boston?"

"More than ever, kid. More than ever."

In the Statler Office Bldg
Open until 1 am. Dinner until midnight.

Cigars—The Boston Cigar Factory is hosting a month-long display of Cuban art. Various displays include rare 19th and 20th century cigar labels, turn-of-the-century photos inserted in packages of Cuban cigars and cigarettes, old-style Cuban cigar boxes along with paintings, drawings, prints, posters and sculptures by several Cuban artists. The art will be displayed for sale to benefit The Center for Cuban Studies Art Space in Massachusetts. 186 Lincoln St.; 695-CUBA.

Walking Tours—The Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities is offering walking tours of Boston's historic Beacon Hill, Saturdays and Sundays, May through October. Entitled "Magnificent and Modest," the tour is led by expertly-trained guides who bring visitors to not just the sunny, tree-lined streets where the affluent resided, but also the humbler North Slope, an area which was home to Boston's working class. The cost of the tour is $10 and is limited to 15 people (reservations are recommended). The SPNEA, 141 Cambridge St.; 227-3956 ext. 256.

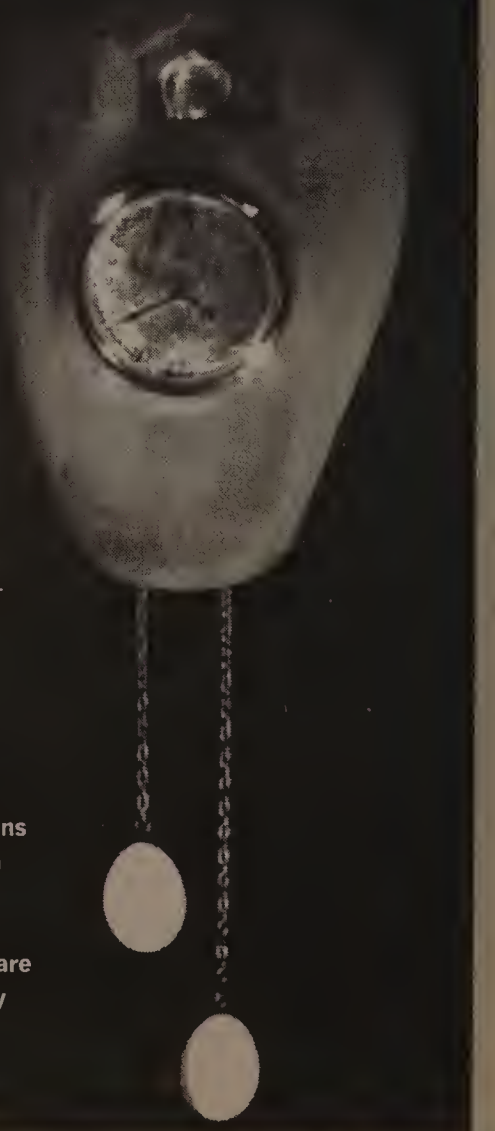
Hiking—Did you know that Mt. Monadnock is the second most frequently climbed mountain in the world? On June 20 join the Boston Ski & Sports Club as they hike to the summit for an awesome panoramic view of New England. $25 includes a guided hike, maps and trail snacks. • June 27 hike the beautiful skyline trail in the Winchester Fells. This is a great hike for those interested in getting into hiking as a sport or if you just want to get out and have a fun day with new friends from the BSSC. The six-mile hike costs $35 and includes maps and a BBQ lunch. Call 789-4070 for more info.



Cycling—Saturday and Sunday, June 27 & 28 take part in a beautiful 150 mile event that offers a fully catered weekend of cycling fun for all levels. To benefit the National MS Society, the event begins at the World Trade Center and ends in Provincetown with overnight accommodations being provided by the Mass Maritime Academy. A party for all participants will be held on Saturday night and a party boat will ferry those returning on Sunday. Message therapists will be on hand to help keep you riding. A minimum of $250 in pledges is required to participate and pre-registration is required. Call David Howell at (800) 493-9255.

Running—The Fifteenth Annual POW-MIA Race for Freedom will be held on Sunday, June 28 beginning at 10 am. Sponsored by the New England Athletic Congress, the event starts and finishes at the Boston Teachers' Union parking lot (behind the MDC police station, Day Blvd., South Boston-Columbia Station T stop) and benefits the POW-MIA Awareness Committee. For more information call M. Dunn at 961-2110.

Biological Art

Ten years of hard work have paid off. Amy Wilson's show, "Modern Biology", including photographs, video, visual books, and sculpture exploring themes of female physiology, fertility, pregnancy, and motherhood will be at Mobius, 354 Congress St., Boston. In addition to work from the last ten years, Wilson will also show her most recent creations, one of which is a uterine-shaped cuckoo clock that whispers, warns and calls. The show runs from June 17 to July 3, with a reception and gallery talk with Wilson on June 20 from 3 to 5 p.m. The gallery hours are Wednesday through Saturday 12 p.m. to 5.

BY BETSY SHERMAN

★ Don't Bother
★★ Fair
★★★ Good
★★★★ Terrific

The Last Days of Disco ★★1/2
Director-writer Whit Stillman created a preppie-roundelay genre with Metropolitan and Barcelona. If you likes the verbal adrenalin and arcane character shadings in those films, you'll be fond of this one, set in the early '80s among twentysomethings who frequent the hot disco of the moment. The aspiring book editors played by Chloe Sevigny and Kate Beckinsale come across a formula for bestsellers: sympathetic characters with big problems. Stillman's amusing wink is to transgress this formula, acknowledging he never expects to have a hit movie. Minutia reigns, and the question isn't whether the characters have flaws, but how deep they run. The women, recent Hampshire College grads, penetrate Manhattan nightlife with an older group of Harvard buddies. Stillman hits an odd, addictive mixture of spot-on realism and extravagant soap opera. Beckinsale proves herself a quintessential Stillman antagonist as the addictive Charlotte.

Bulworth ★★★★
Warren Beatty looked like he'd flatlined in Love Affair, so it's astonishing that he could be behind as vital and meaningful a movie as Bulworth. He co-wrote it, directed and gives his best performance in decades as a liberal senator so far at the end of his rope that he says what's on his mind during the weekend before the election. The movie is thankfully not the Liar Liar clone it's being sold as—its comedy grows out of the main character's raw despair and fatigue. Oliver Platt is hilarious as Bulworth's chief of staff, who implodes as the senator blasts his colleagues, constituents, contributors, the media and his own complicity in society's injustices. While speaking at a black church, Bulworth becomes infatuated with a mysterious girl played by Halle Berry, and he is energized by visits to LA's black neighborhoods (hence his rapping and change into homeboy duds). Berry is rather opaque, but Don Cheadle is strong as the 'hood kingpin'.

Radha Mitchell and Ally Sheedy star in High Art.

High Art ★★★
Ally Sheedy's amazing comeback is just one reason to see this well-observed drama about high-strung, strung-out New York artistic types by first-timer Lisa Cholodenko. As Lucy, a once- praised photographer who has foresaken her art to live in heroin-chic stasis with her demanding German actress girlfriend, Sheedy is alarmingly authentic. The film's protagonist is Syd, an up-and-comer at a photography magazine who coaxes Lucy into making a comeback. Syd is drawn into the drug scene, and becomes attracted to the enigmatic Lucy. Babyfaced Australian actress Radha Mitchell gives a poised performance in the lead role. Patricia Clarkson is funny as overdramatic, ever-wasted German. Very sharp dialogue.

Kurt and Courtney ★★
You may need an iron constitution to make it through this draining documentary, which is gained notoriety because of Courtney Love's attempts to quash Nick Broomfield's making the film and distributing it (it was dropped from Sundance, and its Nirvana music has been cut out). We get insight about punk poet Cobain's youth from his aunt, then get a horrific portrait of Kurt's years with Courtney. Seattle denizens portray her as a "harpy" who manipulated Kurt. Detective Tom Grant theorized that Love had Cobain murdered (he says the police believed too readily that it was suicide). The most disturbing character in the freak show is Love's father Hank Harrison, one of her biggest detractors. Despite its engrossing moments, the film is full of loose ends, and Broomfield's narcissistic omnipresence is a turnoff. Since its motivating factor is the terrible loss of Cobain, the movie is deeply sad.

The Truman Show ★★★
Jim Carrey gives us a classic tragicomic figure in Truman Brubank, a man whose whole life has been filmed, unbeknownst to him, for a continuously running TV broadcast. The movie is presented in a visual style that makes us complicit in the invasion of Truman's privacy: through lens-like framings, we watch the likeable Everyman at work and play in the bright and shiny community of Seahaven (a nostalgic place not unlike the setting of The Prisoner). We also meet TV show creator Christof (Ed Harris), who orchestrates the surreptitious filming of Truman's life. A snafu tips the 30-year-old Truman off that someone is watching him. Paranoia gives way to exhiliration as he tries to escape the microscope. Carrey gives us a Truman we can root for, but the movie as a whole has a watered-down feel, and its supporting performances are weak.

Tastings

BY KRYSTIAN VON SPEIDEL

Climb to the Top

Next time your special someone offers you dinner and a movie as a night out on the town, gleefully agree-then drag them to the Museum of Science. On Wednesday, June 24 the newly refurbished Skyline Room on the museum's sixth floor will offer not only the splendid nouveau cuisine of Chef Lynda Boothroyd, but views of the Boston and Cambridge skylines from a dining room overlooking the Charles River. Following dinner, guests will be escorted to the Omni Theater for a screening of the Imax movie Everest. Filmed by Newton-based filmmaker David Breashear, the movie's tickets alone are worth the $32 price of the evening. Dinner starts promptly at 5:30 and parking is free. Reservations are required (the dinner is limited to 100 guests) and may be gleaned by calling 723-2500.

Wines Down Under

If only clothes-shopping were always as pleasurable as Country Road (140 Newbury St.) on a Thursday night. That's when the decidedly unpretentious boutique hosts its 6-8 pm wine tasting. The weekly event provides customers with the opportunity to sample the finest red and white Australian wines whilst shopping for a sassy new weekend or workday outfit. Just remember not to spill anything on the clothes! Call 262-3820 for more information.

Food of Titanic Proportions

Celebrate the Edwardian splendor of Beacon Hill's Hampshire House as it recreates the lost era of the opulence that created the R.M.S. Titanic on Friday, June 19. Completed the year before the Titanic's maiden voyage, the restaurant attempts to capture the same feeling of elegance that graced the first class salons on the White Star's premier ocean liner. The Hampshire House's "Dinner on the Titanic" menu will feature six courses compromised from the ship's original first class menu.

The style of service, the decor and the actual menu items will be revisited-in keeping with the theme guests are encouraged to dress in black tie or period attire. With each course, commentary will be provided on the menu items and why they were chosen by Chef Markus Ripperger. Dinner will be followed by attendees being invited to the restaurant's drawing room for cordials and cigars. Cocktails begin at 7:30 pm and dinner is served at 8 pm. The cost of the evening is $50 per person; call 227-9600 for reservations and more information.

Un Vin Merveilleux

The French-American Chamber of Commerce is hosting its annual "Flavors of Alsace" wine-tasting seminar on June 23; the event highlights some of the finest Alsatian wines, many of them new to the American market. Alsatian wines are highly valued for their crisp flavors and lend themselves to seafood and other light summer favorites. Alsatian-born owner of Sandrine's Bistro, Chef Raymond Ost and Improper wine columnist Sandy Block will lead an informative seminar regarding the wines. A reception following the tasting will feature Alsatian hors d'oeuvres prepared by Chef Ost.

Held at the Downtown Club on the 33rd floor of the State Street Bank Building, 225 Franklin Street, the reception will take place from 6 pm to 8 pm. Tickets for the much-anticipated event are $30; call Mary Rinaldi, FACC executive director, at 542-7071 regarding tickets and more information.

Fire It Up!

Summertime and the living is easy-Williams Sonoma and Salem's Red Raven's Havana Executive Chef David Chicane make it even easier. On June 28 from 10:30 am to noon, Chef Chicane will teach eager beavers how to turn an ordinary outdoor grill into a smokin' tool du jour. Summer calls for more than just plain old greasy burgers and dogs-unlock your grill's potential using Chef Chicane's easy methods of grilling smoked flavored veggies, meats and chicken. The grill meister will also offer a step-by-step guide to building the perfect barbecue fire. Just think of all the lighter fluid you'll save!

The perfect gift for Dad's Day, the class is $25 per person and prepayment is required to reserve a space on a first-come, first-serve basis. To register, call 262-3080.

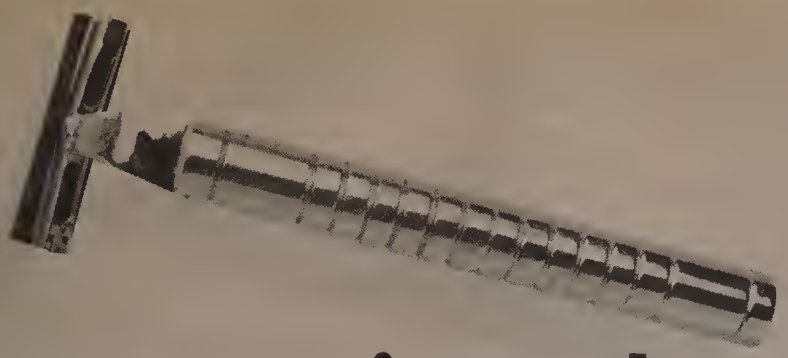
I'm sorry for the way I let my childhood predispositions affect our relationship. As you know, I have quite a few issues to resolve. I'm getting there though. You don't know how much it hurts me to see you drift off into a different life—a life without me. You were the daily bread of my eyes. I for me, and you for me, and never another. That doesn't ring too true anymore, does it? I'm such a plaything of circumstance. I truly think that there are as many ways of loving as there are people in the world and as there are days in the lives of those people. My point: I love you. I wish we were still together in happier circumstances.
JOSH

Sonja at Mass General
Believe me, this is not my ideal choice for contacting you, but alas, I have no choice. We met briefly at a Beacon Hill rooftop party on Saturday, May 20. I haven't been able to stop thinking about you since. After telling me you worked at Mass General, I told you that you must go to bed at night feeling like you'd helped people, and you told me you went to bed at night feeling like you'd been walked all over. I spent the rest of that evening wishing I could get to know you more, exchanging the usual party banter with a faceless crowd. Have you ever met someone and yearned for a way to get to know them better, that something unexplainable about that person had you intrigued, searching for the right words to gain their interest? Well, admittedly, I was in that spot, lost for words and feeling like a 13-year-old wanting to ask the prettiest girl in school for a dance. While it was nice to feel so young again, it's a little unnerving and now regrettable that I didn't tell you directly. My karma is genuine and kind, and being that I don't ask for much, hopefully the "gods" will put the planets and stars in line and your emerald eyes will fall upon this unconventional approach. I'll be hoping for a response here.
CHRIS

Warren
At least that's what I think your first name is. I see you every morning on the commuter rail. You ride it into South Station and then mysteriously disappear. I don't know where you work, although you are usually well dressed. I have spotted you in various places around town (The Glass Slipper, Video Arcades, looking at Jock Sturges' books at Barnes & Noble). I'd love to have coffee with you (and possibly some kids!). Next time you get on the T, turn around and I'll be waiting to talk to you.
NANCY FROM NORWOOD

Katie, the prettiest flower in Oliver's Garden
I think you're pretty sweet. I came in on your second day. I was the cheesy kid singing along to Ally McBeal. I was busting on you for forgetting the fries. Remember? Probably not. I'm friends with Andrienne—ask her about me. I would love to take you out. I'm thinking traditional dinner and movie. Or maybe we could go running? I did my homework. I work in the Financial District in advertising. I'm 22. Call me.
JM



To the Hs (not Howarths)
We will NOT miss you living upstairs from us. We will NOT miss Mrs. H's raging temper tantrums. We will NOT miss Mr. H's rudeness and all-out dweebness (except on the news). We will NOT miss kids screaming and running all around at 6 am. We will NOT miss Mrs. H at The Hill, because we all know she will be back. We WILL miss the entertainment the entire situation you have provided us over the past year and three months. Goodbye and good riddance.
THE WEASEL FRATERNITY BOYS

To the beautiful Irishman at the Purple Shamrock
You made me laugh and gave me company while I was out alone at the Purple Shamrock. We had a few cocktails; you shared your Parliaments with me and we compared our hideous passports. I was having the best time since I moved here and was glad to welcome you into my home. I was a little loaded and took things too fast when you noticed a little something in my bathroom. I swear it was my sister and her boyfriend's. I really wish you would call. I would like for you to come over, and we'll really have some coffee, my dear, sweet James Dean look-alike. My heart is FLYING for you.
MISUNDERSTOOD AND MISSING YOU

To the funny man's mother
Please accept my sincerest apologies for causing you any hardship or emotional pain, for this was certainly not my intent. You were exceedingly kind and handled a difficult situation with tact and the utmost class. My issues were not with you but with your son. These issues have been rectified in full and this matter is closed for all intents and purposes. I wish you much luck and good things in the future.
A SHYLOCK NO LONGER

To my girl at the Arlington T stop
You are dark haired and possible have some Asian influence in your genealogy. I see you in the mornings sometimes around Washington Square in Brookline. Mostly I see you around Arlington. I am pretty sure you have seen me, but I am NOT sure if I should approach. Hell, you're beautiful, so you probably have a guy already. But regardless of all that, I think, since we are obviously on the same "life schedule," we should at least have some sort of interaction....
BYE FOR NOW

To the "hotty" I met on Memorial Day at Woodstock Station It was in Lincoln, New Hampshire. You were with 18 or so other guys, and it was a bachelor party for one of them. We sat and talked a little, not to mention having a few shots...I guess that's why your name escapes my memory...however, your dark eyes, gorgeous smile and the feeling of your body as we danced has not. I know that you work at the airport and live in Boston. Yet, I do not know whether you're single and are ever in this area...perhaps you'll let me know. Contact me here.

Curious Liquids is a paragon of coffeehouses.
- Boston Phoenix

Care for a cup of coffee in an ancient wine cellar? Curious Liquids is the perfect spot.
- The Suffolk Journal

Here is a tea room / coffee house for the nineties. What a great spot to relax.
- Sidewalk.com

Good people of the world, WHERE magazine needs to enlist you in a very noble cause. We're asking you to put down that coffee you bought from that corporate-chain coffee house and immerse yourself in some liquid wonder...
- Where magazine

The combination of comfy, tattered velvet couches and a wide variety of books and board games creates the feeling of a swanky family room in the basement.
- The Daily Free Press

Drinkable and soft, cafe has it. The decor is equally interesting – vintage furniture upstairs, red aud platinum rooms downstairs...

Rockie HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

JUNE 17 - JUNE 30, 1998

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

You've probably done enough moving and shaking for a while. Relax this weekend, hang with the folks next door and celebrate the summer solstice in style. Domesticity, family history (particularly the paternal side), and real estate ads can be as interesting (they'll also satisfy your insatiable curiosity) as attending to a slew of details or reaching out to a bunch of numbers in your book. Until the Cancer new moon energy takes hold (say, next Wednesday), refrain from starting anything new.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Include a few friends in your Father's Day event; they'll make you feel much better, and more beloved. This weekend good fortune comes through a group effort; if you're buying lottery tickets, do so en masse. Because the Cancer new moon falls in your money house, take a minute Tuesday night to visualize how you want the bucks to flow. Although Venus is moving out of your sign, your ruling planet makes sure that an act of grace or generosity is rewarded, that your talent is acknowledged, even acclaimed. Wow!

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Over-extended? Where's Papa when you need a father figure? Lucky for you, generous Jupiter is in your midheaven, protecting your family's good name and your pushed-to-the-limits career path. However, unbridled enthusiasm and brazen balls can play havoc with your nerves until the July Fourth weekend, until horny Mars in your sign moves out. To balance this fiery energy, diplomatic Venus slides into your sign next Wednesday and somewhat soothes the savage breast. She could also channel money (a donation?) your way.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Summertime! Celebrate big time this week, even if it's not your birthday. When the moon, your ruling light, meets the Cancer sun Tuesday night, a brand-new cycle begins for you. For the rest of us, too, but we're nowhere near as affected on such a personal level. Envision what sort of year you'd like and take into account the fact that Saturn, the great delayer, has moved on to Taurus, and instead of frustrating your plans, can now turn them into a reality. Except next Thursday, when a partnership may be challenged.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Riding high? I'm assuming that today's Jupiter-sun square is providing opportunities to expand on all levels, and that you're having a fine time of it. Enjoy the weekend. Come Monday, you can organize a concrete plan, and after the Cancer new moon Tuesday night, contact the people who'll help you set it in motion. Friends, present and past, close and casual, play a big role in how you proceed. Artists and women (Venus) make it easier to express yourself, older males in authority (Saturn) erect bigger barriers.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Like Leo, you're on one helluva ride. Enthusiastic Jupiter in your Pisces house of partners gives you the idea that all things are possible, if only you touch all bases. Well, maybe the Cancer new moon can help you focus, primarily on the family and how that connection can help in your career. Your reputation matters more right now than it will in August, so massage the folks who'll extol your virtues if and when the time comes. Keep an eye out for a woman you can create with.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

A sense of well-being, optimism and good fortune courtesy of Jupiter's contact with your Venus ruler. Take advantage and let go of the worrisome stuff for a while. The Cancer new moon may bring another development in family life, perhaps also a different way of seeing the past. Historians, chefs and real estate brokers take significant career steps in the next two weeks, since these are the occupations that Cancer rules, but any of you with ambitious enough souls can find a toehold up your respective ladder.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Have a good time with the pretty people, the artists, too. After Venus leaves Taurus, your cosmic complement, they won't be such a stellar attraction. Not that you'll abandon the beauties entirely, but they'll become peripheral to your main objective, which appears, from this vantage point, to be fishing for other people's money. The new moon falls in the spot where partners' assets and resources can be found. Because Cancer is also a water sign, the feelings, the connections among you run deep and are often unspoken.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

The pressure you're under (or creating for others) eases off as gracious Venus contacts your expansive Jupiter ruler on Sunday, bringing you to a doubly lucky, sociable and artistic event that you should enjoy to the max. (It's perfect for Father's Day celebrations.) The Cancer new moon energizes dealings with partners, mates, allies and attorneys, so you can expect something new to bubble up soon with one or two of them. However, stark reality can reshape a long-standing fantasy, an ideal you hold dear.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Like the start of Capricorn, the summer solstice puts you and your current approach to life in perspective. These magical occasions (rather than the equinoxes) are the times to balance your act, to add someone else into the mix if that element is missing. You'll have support for whatever you choose to do when the sun sextiles your Saturn ruler on Monday. A family matter, a situation at work can be cleared up in your usual persistent manner. However, don't tread on an artistic ideal in the process.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Fun, games and a burst of creativity once the Cancer new moon comes up with new possibilities. This is a good time to be with kids, to pick up on their trends so that you can stay "relevant" and "in the moment." Venus shifting into airy Gemini means that you'll be more comfortable at home, and, when it trines Neptune in your sign next week, artistically inspired. Painters, musicians and actors have a chance to show just how talented they are, how spiritually uplifting their work can be. Don't let an old fart stop you.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

The start of summer should wash away some of the anxiety and excitement that came on the winds of Gemini. A wet, comforting Cancer vibe can help you connect to your home and family in a deeper, less intellectual, less conversational way. Count on your siblings and neighbors to add charm and tact to the Father's Day, Graduation Day, Wedding Day festivities, to lighten your load. This way when loving Venus trines your Neptune ruler next Thursday, you'll be able to give your all, to be utterly true to your heart.

Kennedy Library: above, Carolyn Bessette-Kennedy.

A CAMELOT REVIVAL IN DORCHESTER...

As with everything involving the Kennedys, there was an aura of newsworthy glamour, surrounded by overtones of earnest, if slightly tattered, idealism, at the 10th Annual May Dinner to benefit the John F. Kennedy Library.

Basking in the reflected glory of Massachusetts' greatest political dynasty since the Adamses, were such Kennedy courtiers as John Kenneth Galbraith, JFK's ambassador to India, and his wife, Kitty, Pulitzer-prize winning historian David McCullough and his wife, Rosalie, ubiquitous banker Ira Jackson, Boston's best-dressed man of the cloth Rev. Charles Stith, Herald publisher Pat Purcell, philanthropists John and Diddy Cullinane and assorted liberal Democrats.

Representing the royal house—in the seniors division: senator Ted and wife Victoria Reggie Kennedy, along with Pat Kennedy Lawford. Juniors included Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg and her husband, Ed, magazine publisher and subject of endless vaporizing, JFK Jr. and several young men with the family's trademark blinding smile.

Eclipsing them all, however, was the clan's newest infusion of beauty and prey for the paparazzi, Carolyn Bessette-Kennedy. For those of you who care about these things: She and her husband seem as happy as anyone. She doesn't look pregnant, and it's rude to ask. And Yohji Yamamoto designed her dress.

Any other questions, go buy a tabloid. Or better yet, mind your own business.

COURTSHIP RITUALS OF HIGHER PRIMATES...

It was an unusual menagerie of party animals who turned out at the Franklin Park Zoo for its Zootopia benefit, where guests in black tie ate, drank and carried on underneath a big tent, while assorted other species did likewise in their cages.

On hand were Mayor Menino and quasi governor Celucci, who presented the zoo with a $2.5 million gift, along with parks commissioner and wild-woman Justine Liff, celebrity veterinarian John de Jong, blueblooded party boy Yoshi Belash and his management consultant wife, Katie Sweetman, well-built architect Peter Niemitz, Design Times publisher Catharine Arnston, the dashing David Kulow, zoo director and sometime cowboy Brian Rutledge, his wife, Kathleen (a sled dog racer and former model), board chairwoman Grace Fey (who made the bold fashion choice of wearing zebra stripes) and one young man who overheard his companion saying, "I think it's just cruel." "What?" he asked. "You mean zoos in general?" "No," she said. "Having to walk on grass in high heels."

WHAT GOES AROUND COMES AROUND...

Prada. Gucci. Goodwill. As the song from Sesame Street goes, "One of these things is not like the other. One of these things just doesn't belong."

Nevertheless, they shared a runway at the Morgan Memorial Goodwill Gala, held at Louis. The evening included cocktails and dinner for 700 beneath a gargantuan tent, gift bags from Tiffany's on every chair (except at the press table), a silent auction, the debut performance of pop group Chivalry and a demi-celebrity fashion show emceed by news anchors Brian Leary and Heather Khan.

Among those strutting their stuff on the catwalk—which ran down the middle of Newbury Street between Berkeley and Clarendon and turned all of Back Bay into a giant traffic jam—were spin mistress Geri Denterlein of McDermott O'Neill, BankBoston's Michele Courton Brown, Palmer and Dodge partner Ruth Fitch and saucy salsa dancer Carlos Martinez, executive director of La Alianza Hispana. Witnessing the spectacle were inveterate party-goers like Cambridge landlord Marvin Gilmore, Louis owner Murray Pearlstein and his daughter, Debbie Greenberg, movie producer Mitchell Robbins, southern dumpling Mary Hull and her husband, Mark Baranski, and the man of a thousand bow-ties, Preston McSwain.

On his way to the bathroom, located inside the store, a man stopped to peruse a rack of pricey designer clothing and said, "Wait a few years. All this stuff will show up at Goodwill."

THEATER OF THE ABSURDLY BRIEF...

Catering to arts patrons with deep pockets and short attention spans, the American Repertory Theater hosted a One-Minute Play Festival for its annual pA.R.T.y fund-raiser.

First, guests were treated to dinner in the garden of the president of Radcliffe's house. Then, they were encouraged to spend 'til it hurt during a fantasy auction emceed by humorist Art Buchwald and hotelier Robin Brown. A series of 60-second dramas rounded out the evening, with such high-profile participants as acting oddity Christopher Walken, Tony award winner Cherry Jones, writer-performer Anna Deavere Smith and TV icon Daniel J. Travanti interpreting works created specifically for the occasion by the likes of Christopher Durang, David Mamet, Steve Martin, John Guare and Joan and Robert B. Parker.

Spotted in the audience: Broadway bigwig Rocco Landesman, event co-chair Gwenn Cohen and her husband, Sid, retired Harvard dean Henry Rosovsky, Boston Lyric Opera artistic director Janice Mancini Del Sesto and gazillionaire George Krupp, who can't seem to keep his checkbook in his pants.

By 10:30, guests had stuffed themselves to satisfaction, seen 11 theatrical premiers and raised more than $50,000 for the organization. Not bad for a Monday night. ✦
